14 MR. BURNS: Good morning, your Honor. Gordon Burns, 15 for the California Attorney General.

16 THE COURT: Very well. Good morning. I believe 17 that's all.

18 All right. Well, Mr. Cooper, it's your motion that I 19 think we're going to spend most of the time on.

20 We have a couple of items that are before us. We 21 have a motion for summary judgment that the proponents have 22 filed.

23 We have also a motion to stay which has not been 24 fully briefed, as I understand it; and furthermore, that may 25 possibly be mooted by a ruling on the motion for summary

1 judgment. So it would be my inclination to postpone hearing
2 the motion to stay until we work through the motion for summary 3 judgment.

4 And so, unless counsel have some other plan or need 5 that they feel that the proper management of the case demands, 6 I would suggest we proceed immediately to the motion for 7 summary judgment. How does that sound to you, Mr. Cooper?

8 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, that suits me just fine.
9 Thank you very much.

10 THE COURT: And you, Mr. Olson?

11 MR. OLSON: Thank you, your Honor. That's fine with 12 us.

13 THE COURT: All right. Fine.

14 Now, let's begin. If you don't mind, before you get 15 into your argument, talk a little bit about civil procedure; 16 the subject that is of some interest to me, at least.

17 As I understand the five grounds that you have 18 asserted in support of your motion for summary judgment, there
19 is only one -- the first ground, the Baker v. Nelson ground -- 20 that would dispose of the case in its entirety.

21 MR. COOPER: Yes, your Honor.

22 THE COURT: Is that correct?

23 MR. COOPER: That is correct, except to the extent 24 that the Court would agree with our submission that the facts 25 relevant to the various issues before you are legislative

1 facts, as we've submitted before, and that they don't require a 2 trial in order for you to fully master -- fully master the 3 relevant factual information to render your decisions. That 4 would be the only other scenario I can think of in which a 5 summary judgment would be appropriate.

6 And, in fact, that is the procedure that, as we've 7 noted before, all the other same-sex-marriage cases have 8 essentially followed; but as a matter of law, the only case I 9 have that -- that takes care of everything, in my opinion, is 10 Baker against Nelson, yes, sir.

11 THE COURT: All right. The others are essentially 12 motions for partial summary judgment, having to do with the 13 standard of review, or perhaps one of your grounds is to 14 eliminate the Due Process claim, which would be one of the 15 plaintiffs' claims, and so forth; but essentially, four out of 16 the five grounds should be analyzed under Rule 54(b) rather 17 than summary judgment on the entire case.

18 MR. COOPER: That's right, your Honor. And I should 19 only add that one of our purposes, as we mentioned from the 20 outset, was to submit to the Court partial motions on -- on 21 discrete legal issues that we thought might skinny down the 22 discovery, and skinny down this trial.

23 THE COURT: All right.

24 MR. COOPER: So that is the purpose of those other --

25 THE COURT: Sure. Well, that's a perfectly

1 reasonable approach. And -- and I fully understand that.

2 So why don't we bite off the big one first, and talk
3 about Baker versus Nelson?

4 MR. COOPER: Very well, your Honor. If the Court
5 please, however, I'd like to place the -- our arguments under 6 Baker against Nelson and the other ones in a perspective here; 7 kind of an introductory perspective.

8 The purpose of Proposition 8, according to the 9 California Supreme Court in the Strauss case, your Honor -- and 10 these are its words -- was simply to restore the traditional 11 definition of marriage, referring to a union of a man and a 12 woman.

13 So the voters, last November in California, elected 14 to restore the definition of marriage that had prevailed not 15 only in the State of California since it became a state, but 16 had prevailed in every civilized society throughout the ages.
17 And the traditional definition of marriage still prevails, 18 your Honor, everywhere in the world, with the exception of five 19 American states and seven foreign countries.

20 Now, plaintiffs' constitutional challenge to 21 Proposition 8 is founded, in large part, on their claim that 22 the traditional opposite-sex definition of marriage serves no
23 legitimate societal purpose; that is to say the opposite-sex
24 definition of marriage that has been adopted by all societies 25 in all places at all times in recorded history has been adopted

1 for no good societal reason.

2 Now, your Honor, the plaintiffs go even farther, 3 because they say that the opposite-sex definition -- the 4 traditional definition of marriage -- is so irrational, so 5 utterly baseless, that it can only be explained on grounds of 6 naked animus to gays and lesbians: antipathy.

7 Mr. Boies has put it, too, discussing this very case,
8 in these terms; that marriage is nothing more than the residue 9 of centuries of figurative and literal gay bashing.

10 Now, your Honor, this claim we resist and we reject.
11 It condemns as bigoted most Californians; the vast majority of 12 all Americans, including, for example, President Obama; large 13 majorities in both houses of Congress -- at least, the Congress 14 that passed DOMA; a large majority of every state and federal 15 judge that has examined the issues that are now before you.

16 By our count, 70 of 108 judges -- state and 17 federal -- have concluded that marriage is, indeed, supported 18 by a rational justification, and they either did uphold it, or 19 they would have upheld it.

20 Justice O'Connor, in her concurring opinion, in 21 Lawrence, said that preserving traditional marriage is 22 supported by legitimate state interests other than moral 23 disapproval of gays; but, your Honor, I think the point that 24 I'm trying to make here is best put by the New York Court of 25 Appeals in the Robles case, when they said this, very 1 efficiently.

2 Until a few decades ago, it was an 3 accepted truth for almost everyone who ever
4 lived in any society in which marriage
5 existed that there could be no -- marriages
6 only between participants of different sex.

7 A court should not lightly conclude that everyone who 8 held this belief was irrational ignorant or bigoted.

9 Your Honor, this case -- at the heart of it are two 10 competing conceptions of the institution of marriage, and of 11 its central purpose.

12 We say that the central and defining purpose of 13 marriage is to channel naturally procreative sexual activity
14 between men and women into stable, enduring unions for the sake 15 of begetting, nurturing, and raising the next generation.

16 Plaintiffs say that the central and the 17 constitutionally mandated purpose of marriage is simply to 18 provide formal government recognition to loving, committed 19 relationships. And, in keeping with that purpose, the 20 plaintiffs say that they have a fundamental constitutional 21 right to marry the person of their choice; to marry the person 22 that they love.

23 Now, there are several implications that I want to 24 draw out at the outset of the Court's consideration here for 25 acceptance of that conception of the institution, and of its

1 defining purpose.

2 The first one is simply this. We submitted -- this 3 is really difficult to think and to imagine what general 4 governmental interest the state has in recognizing and 5 regulating all committed loving relationships.

6 The second point is this. There are a host of 7 personal -- uniquely idiosyncratic, sometimes -- reasons and 8 motivations for people to get married. Love and commitment is, 9 to be sure, common and perhaps hopefully most common, but it's 10 not the only motivation for people to get married.

11 And the -- and the state certainly doesn't -- and 12 it's impossible to imagine how it could -- restrict marriage to 13 people who are loving, committed couples. And so, your Honor, 14 the underinclusiveness --

15 THE COURT: I suppose also the state could not 16 require that, could they?

17 MR. COOPER: No, that's -- they could not. And so 18 the underinclusiveness problem --

19 THE COURT: Well --

20 MR. COOPER: -- that my friends claim --

21 THE COURT: Underinclusive?

22 MR. COOPER: I'm sorry?

23 THE COURT: Underinclusiveness?

24 MR. COOPER: The plaintiffs challenge our conception, 25 our procreation-based definition and conception of marriage as

1 being fatally underinclusive, your Honor, because it is not 2 confined to people who intend to or are able to procreate.

3 THE COURT: Well, the last marriage that I performed, 4 Mr. Cooper, involved a groom who was 95 and the bride was 83.
5 I did not demand that they prove that they intended to engage 6 in procreative activity.

7 Now, was I missing something?

8 MR. COOPER: No, your Honor, you weren't. Of course, 9 you didn't.

10 THE COURT: And I might say it was a very happy 11 relationship.

12 MR. COOPER: I'm very -- I rejoice to hear that,
13 your Honor.

14 Our point is the institution of marriage, like other 15 institutions that states establish, that governments establish 16 and they bring into being to serve certain important societal 17 interests --

18 THE COURT: Well, apropos that, what is the 19 difference, from the point of view of the state, between an 20 opposite-sex marriage and a same-sex marriage? From the 21 state's point of view, how are they different?

22 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, they're different in one 23 fundamental respect, with respect to this purpose, this -- the 24 central purposes that we cite to you for the institution of 25 marriage: it's simple biological reality that same-sex couples

1 do not naturally procreate. Opposite-sex couples -- that is 2 the -- the natural outcome of sexual activity between 3 opposite-sex couples.

4 THE COURT: Well, fair enough; but procreation 5 doesn't require marriage.

6 MR. COOPER: No. No, your Honor, it doesn't; but the 7 state's purpose --

8 THE COURT: And I think I -- I don't want to base any 9 decisions on what I hear on the radio coming to Court in the 10 morning, but there was some statistic that 40 percent -- can 11 this be right? -- 40 percent of female pregnancies in the 12 United States are to unwed females? Is that -- is that right?

13 MR. COOPER: I've -- I would not be surprised. I 14 can't confirm it myself, your Honor, but I've heard similar 15 depressing statistics such as that. And so, yes -- no, the 16 state doesn't require people to get married in order to 17 procreate or to have sexual activity.

18 It doesn't prohibit sexual activity among people who 19 are not married, but it definitely attempts to discourage it 20 through -- and especially to discourage sexual activity outside 21 of the marriage union. That's the purpose of the fidelity 22 requirement in the state statute, the pledge of fidelity that 23 civil marriage places on -- on both parties to the marriage; 24 but my -- but my central point here, your Honor -- the 25 difference -- the key difference -- is that the state has vital

1 interests in the procreative -- naturally procreative activity
2 of opposite-sex couples. It has vital interests to encourage 3 it, to promote it, and to provide benefits to it. That has 4 been the purpose of marriage through the ages.

5 And its purpose is related to two central concerns; 6 concerns that are the state's, in a defensive sense, and that 7 are concerns of the state about its citizenry.

8 The first concern is its own vital interest -- 9 existential interest -- in perpetuating society. Without the 10 procreative activity of opposite-sex couples, as every 11 Supreme Court on marriage has said, the existence of and 12 survival of society would be threatened; but equally important, 13 your Honor, is this notion of responsible procreation. That is 14 the closely related interest in ensuring or at least promoting 15 and encouraging that children are raised in stable, lasting 16 environments by the couple who brought them into the world.
17 That is -- that is both a defensive interest, as I say, so that 18 the state itself does not have to endure the burdens of raising 19 that child, either through the kind of public assistance that 20 often -- almost always accompanies the depressing statistic 21 that the Court referenced earlier, or through other means by 22 which the body politic ultimately has to take responsibility or 23 shoulder some burdens in connection with the raising of 24 children, when their natural parents -- the people who brought 25 them into the world -- don't take that responsibility properly.

1 This is what Congress said, your Honor. This is what 2 Congress said in passing DOMA.

3 THE COURT: Well --

4 MR. COOPER: At bottom, civil society has an interest
5 in maintaining and protecting the institution of heterosexual 6 marriage because it has a deep and abiding interest in 7 encouraging responsible procreation and child rearing. That 8 was Congress' judgment in DOMA.

9 It plainly is a rational interest on the part of 10 society; we would say, indeed, a vital interest on the part of 11 society.

12 And the Court referenced a vivid reason why that is 13 so and -- with the statistic you reference about the 14 phenomenon -- the unfortunate phenomenon of many children 15 growing up in this country without both of their parents to 16 nurture them.

17 THE COURT: Well, let's assume I agree with you that 18 that's an unfortunate phenomenon; but how does that convert to 19 a constitutional standard?

20 It may be unfortunate. It may be unwise. It might 21 not be desirable from a societal point of view, but how does 22 that convert to a prohibition to people who do have all of the 23 essential incidents of the marital relationship? How does that 24 justify precluding them from the marriage estate?

25 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, that gets to the heart of 1 what is a real, fundamental disagreement with my side and 2 Mr. Olson's side about the nature of the Equal Protection

3 analysis before the Court; the nature of rational basis review, 4 which, as you know -- as we submit -- is the governing 5 standard. And I will come back in due time, I hope, to why we 6 think the Court is bound by -- by that standard; but, 7 your Honor, to -- to just go back quickly, and bring into 8 hopefully a clearer focus my point about the state's interests 9 -- its legitimate interests in responsible procreation, it's 10 not just to ensure that the child is brought up by its natural 11 parents. It's, again, to ensure that the state doesn't have to 12 suffer the additional and shoulder the additional 13 responsibilities that would naturally and inevitably devolve 14 upon it for the nurturing of this child in the absence of its 15 natural parents taking responsibility to do that.

16 President Obama's Father's Day speech just this past 17 Father's Day is a vivid statement for -- for why this is so,
18 and why this -- and why society -- the government -- has a 19 crucial interest in promoting these stable, enduring, 20 heterosexual relationships as marriages; why it has that 21 interest.

22 THE COURT: This is all very interesting, but let 23 come down out of the mountain for a moment, and talk about a 24 little law, and get back to Baker versus Nelson.

25 And in that connection, I'm just reading again --

1 rereading again this morning Justice O'Connor's opinion in 2 Turner versus Safely, which I'm sure you're familiar with.
3 That's the prison-marriage case.

4 MR. COOPER: Yes, your Honor.

5 THE COURT: 1987, I believe; a decision in the 6 Supreme Court. Yes. '87.

7 Justice O'Connor wrote,

8 The right to marry, like many other 9 rights, is subject to substantial
10 restrictions as a result of incarceration.
11 Many important attributes of marriage
12 remain, however, after taking into account 13 the limitations imposed by prison life.
14 First, inmate marriages, like others, are 15 expressions of emotional support and public 16 commitment. These elements are an 17 important and significant aspect of the 18 marital relationship. In addition, many 19 religions recognize marriage as having 20 spiritual significance for some inmates and 21 their spouses. Therefore, the commitment 22 of marriage may be an exercise of religious 23 faith as well as an expression of personal 24 dedication. Third, most inmates eventually 25 will be released by parole or commutation,

1 and therefore, most inmate marriages are 2 formed in the expectation that they will 3 ultimately be fully consummated. Finally, 4 marital status often is a precondition to 5 the receipt of government benefits, and so 6 forth.

7 These incidents of marriage, like the religious and 8 personal aspects of the marriage commitment, are unaffected by 9 the fact of confinement or the pursuit of legitimate 10 correctional goals. There's nothing in there about 11 procreation.

12 MR. COOPER: Well --

13 THE COURT: That -- that was an essential element of 14 permitting the individuals in that case to marry.

15 And what of those elements that Justice O'Connor
16 identified would not apply equally to a same-sex marriage?

17 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, I disagree with the 18 proposition that none of those elements made reference to -- a 19 necessary reference to the procreative element of marriage.

20 Justice O'Connor recognized that in most -- even 21 inmate -- marriages, the conjugal element of marriage, 22 consummating that marriage -- that the naturally procreative
23 element of that marriage was an expectation of taking place, 24 even with respect to inmates who are confined.

25 In that respect, there --

1 THE COURT: But the marriage wasn't delayed until 2 that event.

3 MR. COOPER: No, your Honor. No. And we don't pass 4 perfectly -- we don't ask couples to delay their marriage until 5 they assure the state that now they're ready to have -- to 6 have -- to have children.

7 THE COURT: And it's certainly not a precondition of 8 marriage to be able to prove that you can have children.

9 MR. COOPER: No, your Honor, that's true. And -- 10 and, your Honor, there's no -- and this does get back to my 11 earlier point. There is no purpose of marriage -- there is no 12 definition of marriage that would -- that would offer clear and 13 dividing lines between those people who enter into it, and -- 14 and its purposes; even this purpose that the -- and maybe I 15 should say especially this purpose that the plaintiffs cite as 16 being the central purpose of marriage: to recognize loving, 17 committed relationships. Even that can't possibly be 18 restricted to only those couples who can fulfill that purpose 19 or who intend to fulfill that purpose.

20 And -- but what we have to step back and try to 21 analyze is: what is the state's -- what is government's 22 purpose in regulating marriage, in recognizing these unions?

23 Not: what is the individuals' motivation to get 24 married?

25 It's the state's purpose that's important here. And

1 if the state has any conceivable rational purpose, I have to 2 win. Proposition 8 has to be upheld, we believe, under the 3 authorities that control this issue. And so the focus has to 4 be on: what is the state's purpose?

5 And, your Honor, the state has, we submit, two vital 6 purposes for restricting, among its many eligibility 7 requirements --

8 THE COURT: Well --

9 MR. COOPER: -- restricting marriage to opposite-sex 10 couples. Yeah.

11 THE COURT: All right. Let me throw in a question 12 here.

13 Assume I agree with you that the state's interest in 14 marriage is essentially procreative, as you've put it.

15 MR. COOPER: Yes, your Honor.

16 THE COURT: Assume that I agree with that.

17 How does permitting same-sex marriages impair or 18 adversely affect that interest?

19 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, I have two responses I want 20 to make to you.

21 The first one is: that's not the legally relevant 22 question. And I will come back and walk through and examine 23 why I believe that to be so.

24 THE COURT: It depends upon the standard of review we 25 apply. And we're going to come to that, I'm sure, before we're

1 done this morning.

2 MR. COOPER: Obviously, my submission here to you is 3 that this rational-basis standard applies. And so, yes, my 4 arguments here are premised upon --

5 THE COURT: I've given you one assumption. Give me
6 one, for purposes of argument. And that is that this is not 7 rational basis review; this is intermediate scrutiny.

8 MR. COOPER: Well, then, your Honor, I'm going to be 9 coming back to you with arguments.

10 THE COURT: Now we're having a dialogue here. Now 11 assume that you have to have established that this is the 12 minimally effective means of imposing this discrimination 13 between same-sex marriages and opposite-sex marriages. So what 14 is the harm to the procreative purpose or function of marriage 15 that you outline of permitting same-sex marriages?

16 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, even under a 17 compelling-state-interest standard, I would submit to the Court 18 that the state's interests in channeling procreative activity 19 into enduring relationships would be vital, and would satisfy a 20 compelling-interest standard.

21 And I would also submit to the Court that there would 22 be no reasonable available way for -- for that purpose to be 23 fulfilled and advanced, other than the way the state has 24 chosen -- every state has chosen, with five exceptions, and 25 California has chosen through Proposition 8. And, your Honor,

1 that gets to the -- to the fundamental, I think, theoretical 2 disagreement that I mentioned earlier between the Plaintiffs 3 and the Defendant-Intervenors here.

4 They say that it's not enough, as you were suggesting 5 here, for opposite-sex unions to further and advance these 6 vital state interests; that we have to prove, in addition to 7 that, that including same-sex unions into the definition of 8 marriage would actually harm those purposes and interests.
9 That is not the Equal Protection construct, your Honor.

10 THE COURT: I'm asking you to tell me how it would 11 harm opposite-sex marriages.

12 MR. COOPER: All right.

13 THE COURT: All right. Let's play on the same 14 playing field for once. Okay.

15 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, my answer is: I don't know.
16 I don't know.

17 THE COURT: Does that mean -- does that mean if this 18 is not determined to be subject to rational basis review, you 19 lose?

20 MR. COOPER: No, your Honor.

21 THE COURT: Okay.

22 MR. COOPER: I don't believe it -- it does.

23 THE COURT: Just haven't figured out how you're going 24 to win on that basis yet?

25 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor, by -- by saying that

1 the state and its electorate are entitled, when dealing with 2 radical proposals for change, to a bedrock institution such as 3 this to move with incrementally, to move with caution, and to 4 adopt a wait-and-see attitude.

5 Keep in mind, your Honor, this same-sex marriage is a 6 very recent innovation. Its implications of a social and 7 cultural nature, not to mention its impact on marriage over 8 time, can't possibly be known now.

9 THE COURT: So this is a political question, and the 10 Court should abstain? Is that it?

11 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor, certainly at the root 12 of all our arguments here are that this is a question of 13 social/cultural dimension that the people themselves in this 14 state -- and every other -- have the authority to answer. So, 15 yes, the Court -- the Court should do as the Supreme Court did 16 in the assisted-suicide case, and say that this issue is being 17 debated throughout the land on -- in terms of its legality, its 18 morality -- its morality, and its practicality in the 19 democratic process. And that's where it should be, and that's 20 where it should remain. So, yes, your Honor that's at the root 21 of our --

22 THE COURT: All right. Let's talk about that. It's 23 an appropriate matter.

24 As we discussed when the case came here for the first 25 case-management conference, I made the observation that I

1 didn't think this case was doing more than touching down in 2 this court; it was going to go on.

3 What you've just outlined is an appropriate decision 4 for the Supreme Court to make from its position, but now that 5 the case has been filed here and been presented, is that an 6 appropriate approach for the District Court to make, or should 7 I simply decide the issue the best I can, based upon what is 8 presented; and if the Supreme Court decides one way or the 9 other not to review the matter, that's a matter -- prudential
10 decision on the part of the Court, but it's really not a 11 decision that I should exercise?

12 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, I think that the inescapable
13 responsibility, unfortunately, for all of us here, including 14 you -- especially you -- is to do our level best to use the 15 legal standards that we've -- we have from what we believe, 16 anyway, are the controlling precedents, and, you know, follow
17 them where ever they lead, your Honor.

18 We -- it's our earnest submission to you that they 19 lead to the proposition that, in fact, our Constitution, our 20 Equal Protection and our Due Process Clauses of the Fourteenth 21 Amendment haven't decided this question for California and 22 everyone else in the country. They haven't decided this.

23 Opposite-sex marriage --

24 THE COURT: Shouldn't I bite the bullet here?
25 Shouldn't I decide one way or the other, and not just abstain,

1 and say, "Oh, this is a political question, and it's too soon
2 for the federal courts to get involved"?

3 MR. COOPER: Yes, your Honor, you have to do that.

4 It's not my submission -- and forgive me if I wasn't 5 clear. It's not my submission that the Court should simply 6 decline to answer these constitutional issues. They are before 7 the Court. This isn't a political question in the sense that 8 the Court doesn't have jurisdiction over it; but our submission
9 is it's a political question in the sense that the Constitution 10 doesn't mandate the plaintiffs' conception of marriage, nor 11 does it mandate my conception of marriage.

12 If California had decided this the other way, 13 your Honor, I have no doubt that there would be rational bases
14 for it to have come to that conclusion. And I would be content 15 to defend the State of California's judgment on that score.

16 The Constitution isn't the decision maker here; it's 17 the people acting here, and everywhere else in this country.

18 THE COURT: I mean, why do we have this series of 19 Supreme Court decisions applying constitutional principles to 20 marital relationships?

21 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor --

22 THE COURT: The Turner case, the Loving case, all -- 23 I mean, there was a whole string of those cases.

24 MR. COOPER: Yes, your Honor. And the question
25 becomes: do those -- do -- does application of those decisions

1 and the principles in those decisions compel the Court to 2 invalidate Proposition 8, and the traditional opposite-sex 3 definition of marriage? Do they compel that?

4 You know, just an objective, careful, unbiased 5 application of those principles.

6 And, your Honor, our submission -- earnest submission
7 is: no, they don't. You can't get there from here. You 8 can't -- they -- they don't compel that conclusion.

9 And, in fact, a careful application of them leads to 10 my proposition, your Honor, I earnestly submit, that, in fact, 11 this is a decision over -- which the people in a democratic 12 process are free to make.

13 Your Honor -- and again, this does come back to my 14 points about rational basis review. The fact that, under 15 rational basis review, any conceivable state interest, even if 16 I haven't conceived of it, but you can, whether or not it was 17 ever articulated, for example, by the Legislature or here in 18 the Proposition 8 campaign -- if any conceivable state interest
19 is rationally served by Proposition 8 and the opposite-sex 20 definition of marriage, then it has to be upheld.

21 And, your Honor, we've offered, we believe, several;
22 including several vital state interests.

23 In addition, though, as I said, it is a perfectly 24 rational thing for the state and its people not to act 25 precipitously with a bedrock institution such as marriage, but

1 to proceed incrementally. And on this score, I have Attorney
2 General Brown to call upon for support, to my great 3 satisfaction. In the marriage cases in the brief that the 4 Attorney General put in defending Proposition 22, he said,

5 -- maintaining the longstanding and 6 traditional definition of marriage while 7 providing same-sex couples with legal 8 recognition comparable to marriage is a 9 measured approach to a complex and divisive 10 social issue.

11 THE COURT: Well, it does appear the Attorney
12 General's views have evolved on this.

13 MR. COOPER: Yes, it appears they have. It does, 14 indeed; but, your Honor, in my opinion, he was right when he 15 was defending Proposition 22; but, your Honor, I guess it's 16 important now to come back to this -- to this point about why 17 it's not necessary for me to prove including same-sex unions in 18 the traditional definition of marriage would actually harm that 19 institution, or harm the vital purposes that that 20 institution --

21 THE COURT: Well, I understand your answer to that 22 question is you don't know. You don't know.

23 MR. COOPER: No. Well, your Honor, that's --

24 THE COURT: It's a fair answer. If you don't know, 25 you don't know; or if you can't -- you can't say, or it depends

1 on the development of a factual records, well, but --

2 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor, it depends on things
3 we can't know. This is a -- this is a -- that's my point.

4 And the people of the State of California were 5 entitled to step back and watch this experiment unfold in 6 Massachusetts and the other places where it's unfolding, and to 7 assess whether or not -- oh, our concerns about this -- about 8 this new and -- and heretofore unknown marital union have 9 either been confirmed by what's happening in marriage in 10 Massachusetts, or perhaps they've been completely allayed; but 11 my point is: California was entitled not to follow those 12 examples, and to wait and see. That's the whole purpose of 13 federalism.

14 The whole purpose of it, your Honor -- they were -- 15 and when dealing with a bedrock, fundamental institution such 16 as marriage, the state -- it's perfectly rational for it to be 17 risk averse. It doesn't know what possible harms may flow. It 18 may well be that there are no harms; but the state isn't 19 required by the Constitution to take that risk.

20 Does the Constitution demand that the state proceed 21 itself with this experiment, and -- and run the risks of 22 whatever possible adverse consequences might flow?

23 It doesn't. That's our point. And it's rational.

24 THE COURT: What are those potential adverse 25 consequences?

1 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor --

2 THE COURT: Has anybody identified them?

3 MR. COOPER: There have been some, yes, your Honor.
4 For example, there seems to us to be little doubt that if the 5 plaintiffs prevail here, and the definition of marriage is to 6 be expanded to include same-sex couples, then the existing 7 parallel institution of domestic partnership will also have to 8 be expanded to include opposite-sex couples. And that parallel 9 institution, with all the same benefits, will be available to 10 opposite-sex couples. That's exactly how things are proceeding
11 in The Netherlands. And in The Netherlands --

12 THE COURT: What's the effect of that? Is that 13 harmful?

14 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor, there do appear to be 15 a number of adverse social consequences in The Netherlands from 16 this. Domestic partnership is now used, apparently, more by 17 heterosexual couples -- opposite-sex couples -- than is 18 marriage. So marriage -- the effort to channel procreative 19 activity into that institution has abated quite a bit.

20 There's -- there are -- there are other socially 21 unfortunate --

22 THE COURT: But --

23 MR. COOPER: Whether there's a causal relationship,
24 your Honor --

25 THE COURT: Has that been harmful to the society in

1 The Netherlands? Has it been harmful to children? What's the 2 adverse effect?

3 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor, again, I don't -- I
4 don't have a presentation for you on that; but I do,
5 your Honor, submit that it is not self-evident that there is no
6 chance of any harm. And unless it is, the people of California
7 are entitled not to run the risk. And unless he can prove -- 8 Mr. Olson and his colleagues can prove that there is no harm
9 that can possibly come from this, then the people of California 10 are entitled to make the decision that they did.

11 THE COURT: When do constitutional rights depend upon 12 proof of no harm?

13 Freedom of speech? Freedom of press?

14 Lots of harm flows from those fundamental and basic 15 freedoms of ours -- misinformation, incitement to passion, and 16 so forth -- but we tolerate those risks in a free society.

17 So when does the application of a constitutional 18 principle require proof that its application will not impose 19 any risk?

20 MR. COOPER: When, your Honor, the state is not 21 entitled to make a social decision if it has a rational purpose 22 and interest that is served by that decision.

23 And, once again, if its rational and legitimate basis 24 for the eligibility restriction of opposite-sex couples in the 25 marriage institution is procreation based, then it follows that

1 opposite-sex couples serve that interest in a way that same-sex 2 couples do not.

3 They also threaten that interest in a way that 4 same-sex couples do not, because, again, it is the naturally 5 procreative activity of opposite-sex couples that raises the 6 natural result of -- of procreation and childbirth that 7 represents concern for the body politic.

8 And, your Honor, if -- if -- it just doesn't follow 9 that because the state creates an institution for the purpose 10 and -- and nurtures an institution like marriage for a social 11 purpose that opposite-sex couples serve, that it must also 12 include within that institution couples that do not serve it.
13 They're simply not similarly situated with respect to that 14 rational -- and we would say vital -- purpose of this 15 institution.

16 And, your Honor, that's the ultimate --

17 THE COURT: Okay.

18 MR. COOPER: That's the ultimate proposition.

19 We don't have to prove that including them, in fact,
20 would bring about a positive harm. It's simply that not 21 including them is rational because they don't serve the 22 interest.

23 Let me share with you, your Honor, the Court's -- the 24 Supreme Court's commonsense observation on precisely this 25 point.

1 When the inclusion of one group
2 promotes a legitimate government purpose,
3 and the addition of other groups would not,
4 we cannot say that the state's 5 classification of beneficiaries and 6 nonbeneficiaries is invidiously
7 discriminatory.

8 THE COURT: What case are you referring to?

9 MR. COOPER: This is Johnson against Robison, 10 your Honor: 415 United States at 385.

11 I would also offer the Court the University of 12 Alabama against Garrett case, where the Court said this:

13 Under rational basis review, where a 14 group possesses distinguishing 15 characteristics relevant to the interests
16 the state has authority to implement, a 17 state's decision to act on the basis of 18 those differences does not give rise to a 19 constitutional violation.

20 And this is my point precisely, your Honor. The 21 state -- the group of opposite-sex couples possess a 22 distinguishing characteristic that is -- that is plainly 23 relevant to the state's purpose of -- that are related to 24 procreation.

25 THE COURT: All right. You've done a very good job

1 of covering basically issues two through five.

2 I want to bring you back to Baker versus Nelson.

3 MR. COOPER: Very well, your Honor.

4 THE COURT: All right. We can't put very much stock
5 in that case, now, can we? It's old. Old cases are usually 6 the best cases, in the view of some of us; but this is a -- 7 it's a very limited case. It's not a considered decision of 8 the Supreme Court.

9 MR. COOPER: No, no.

10 THE COURT: The issue came up out of Minnesota. The 11 statute there was neutral on its face. It didn't prohibit 12 same-sex marriage. The issue really wasn't squarely presented 13 to the Supreme Court to decide in Baker versus Nelson.

14 And there have been very substantial doctrinal
15 developments in Equal Protection jurisprudence since 1972.

16 So --

17 MR. COOPER: Well, let me -- let me --

18 THE COURT: Can we put any stock in that case at all?

19 MR. COOPER: Yes, your Honor. I believe it continues 20 to be binding on this Court.

21 THE COURT: All right.

22 MR. COOPER: And certainly with respect to the Due 23 Process claim and the sex-discrimination claim; but the first 24 point I want to make is this: that four out of five District 25 Courts that have looked at this have concluded that it is, in

1 fact, binding.

2 One District Court -- the Smelt Court -- said that it
3 isn't binding.

4 THE COURT: That was the don't-ask-don't-tell case, 5 wasn't it?

6 MR. COOPER: The Smelt case?

7 THE COURT: Yes. Wasn't it?

8 MR. CAMPBELL: (Shakes head from side to side).

9 THE COURT: Was that the DOMA case?

10 MR. COOPER: Yes, it was the DOMA case.

11 And the Court distinguished Baker against Carr [sic]
12 because it was dealing with DOMA, and it was dealing with a 13 claim to federal benefits of marriage; but, your Honor, in 14 Baker against Carr [sic], the Court was looking at really --

15 THE COURT: Baker against Carr, or Baker versus 16 Nelson? That's a whole different --

17 MR. COOPER: I'm sorry. Forgive me.

18 THE COURT: A whole different ball of wax,
19 Mr. Cooper.

20 MR. COOPER: Yes, it is.

21 THE COURT: We can only tackle one of these big 22 issues.

23 MR. COOPER: Yes. Your political question got me off 24 on the wrong track here.

25 THE COURT: All right.

1 MR. COOPER: Baker against Nelson, your Honor, we 2 believe brought forward exactly the same claims that you are 3 now treating under the Fourteenth Amendment the Due Process
4 clause and the Equal Protection clause.

5 And the Due Process claim was -- it sounded in all of 6 the terms that the plaintiffs use here -- the plaintiffs 7 there -- the same-sex couple there -- their right to marry the 8 person of their choice, relying specifically, your Honor, on 9 the case that the plaintiffs here specifically and heavily 10 primarily rely on: Loving against Virginia.

11 The Court did not see enough merit in that argument
12 even to take it up and consider it, your Honor. So the Due 13 Process claim and the plaintiffs' definition of their Due 14 Process right simply can't be squared with Baker against 15 Nelson. And, again, four federal district courts, as I read 16 them, anyway, have held that.

17 With respect to the language of the Minnesota 18 statute, yes, it doesn't specifically forbid same-sex marriage.
19 It only allowed -- permitted opposite-sex marriage. In that 20 respect, it's precisely like Proposition 8.

21 And in terms of Lawrence, your Honor, Lawrence
22 specifically held -- or specifically observed, I should say, 23 that the question before you here was not before that Court, 24 and the Court was not making any judgments about at all; and 25 that is the question whether the government must give formal

1 recognition to any relationships that homosexual persons seek 2 to enter.

3 So the Court negated -- the Lawrence Court negated
4 the notion that its judgment about private sexual activity 5 among consenting adults in that most private of places -- the 6 bedroom -- that that judgment had -- had any relevance or was 7 treating with this very different question. So it took care, 8 your Honor, not, I would submit to you, to cast doubt on Baker
9 against Nelson and its Due Process ruling.

10 And there's just no way to understand a Court that 11 summarily rejects the claim that, from two -- from a same-sex
12 couple that we have a constitutional Fourteenth Amendment right 13 to marry the person of our choice. There's no way to 14 understand -- to attribute any substance to that claim, in 15 light of the fact that, in Baker, it was rejected without any 16 hearing argument.

17 With respect to the sex claim as well -- that is, 18 that -- that Proposition 8 discriminates on the basis of 19 gender -- that was foursquare the claim made by the plaintiffs 20 in Baker against Nelson.

21 That the opposite sex-eligibility restriction in 22 Minnesota law, just like the one here, was a gender-based 23 discrimination. And the Court didn't find enough merit in it 24 to hear argument.

25 It did resolve it on the merits, though, your Honor.

1 And, as a merits decision, it is binding. And we would submit 2 that there's -- there's simply no basis for concluding that 3 this -- that the plaintiffs' claims on those two scores, 4 anyway, can survive Baker.

5 THE COURT: Well, if you could, wrap up.

6 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, I do want to come to why we 7 believe that this Court is bound with respect to the Equal
8 Protection claims that the plaintiffs have advanced to apply a 9 rational basis standard of review; that is, its level of 10 scrutiny must be a rational basis. We believe that that is not 11 an open question here; and that is controlled, instead, by the 12 Ninth Circuit's decision in High Tech Gays.

13 The Court there held specifically homosexuals do not 14 constitute a suspect or quasi-suspect class entitled to greater 15 than rational basis scrutiny.

16 Now, it is true, as the plaintiffs say, that the 17 Court reference to Bowers, an incongruous incongruity that 18 would be created if, in the face of the Bowers case, which has 19 been --

20 THE COURT: Well, relied on Bowers. In the High Tech
21 case, Bowers was overruled.

22 MR. COOPER: True. True enough, your Honor, but the 23 Court, after noting the incongruity with the claim of 24 quasi-suspect-class classification in the Bowers decision, the 25 Court went on to quite independently analyze whether sexual

1 orientation is a suspect class under the standard factors. And 2 it concluded that -- that sexual orientation is not, because 3 it's not immutable, and because the class affected that are 4 gays and lesbians are not politically powerless. So it 5 independently concluded that rational basis review applies, and 6 that this class is not a quasi-suspect class, your Honor.

7 And since that time, the Ninth Circuit, after 8 Lawrence, overruled Bowers. The Ninth Circuit has credited 9 that ruling and -- and the judgment made by the Ninth Circuit 10 in High Tech Gays that rational basis review applies. And that 11 is the Witt case. And that is the don't-ask-don't-tell case,
12 your Honor.

13 The other point I want to emphasize --

14 THE COURT: Well, "Don't ask; don't tell" is 15 different, isn't it? "Don't ask; don't tell" condemns conduct 16 or expression, whereas we're not dealing here with expressive 17 conduct; we're dealing with a classification.

18 MR. COOPER: But the -- but, your Honor, it's the 19 same classification that was at issue in Witt.

20 And the Court there said that the ruling in High Tech
21 Gays was not disturbed by Lawrence with respect to Equal 22 Protection.

23 It then went on and said that, under Due Process 24 considerations, we -- they applied a heightened standard of 25 scrutiny to that rule; but it wasn't under Equal Protection --

1 the Equal Protection clause, your Honor.

2 And the other point, your Honor, I want to emphasize 3 here is that every court of appeals that has looked at the 4 issue of whether or not gays and lesbians are a quasi suspect 5 or a suspect class has ruled that they're not, and that 6 rational basis review obtains. That's ten circuit courts of 7 appeal; six of them reiterating it after Lawrence.

8 So, your Honor, this is -- this is an issue that not 9 only is the Court bound by, but it -- it is an issue, we 10 submit, is plainly correct.

11 THE COURT: All right.

12 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, thank you.

13 THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Cooper.

14 Mr. Olson.

15 MR. OLSON: Thank you, your Honor.

16 THE COURT: Why don't you begin where Mr. Cooper left 17 off, with discussion of Baker versus Nelson?

18 MR. OLSON: I will, your Honor.

19 I think that the points that you made in your 20 question are the points that I would make, but let me make them 21 item by item. It is a 1972 decision. A lot has happened since 22 then.

23 It is a summary of affirmance which the Court, in 24 Mandel versus Bradley, specifically said is limited. Its 25 precedential value is limited to the precise issues presented,

1 and necessarily decided.

2 And, as the Court pointed out in Morse versus 3 Republican Party, it is a slender reed on which to rest future 4 decisions, which is very close to the words that you used.

5 Secondly, as the Court pointed out in Mandel, it's 6 very important that the Court -- this Court -- look at the 7 facts of that case and the doctrinal basis of that case. The 8 facts here are very, very different.

9 THE COURT: How so?

10 MR. OLSON: One, the domestic partnerships which -- 11 that was a big, important point for the Court in Baker, because 12 it said: if the same-sex marriage right is upheld, it will 13 disturb laws with respect to inheritance, contracts, taxation, 14 and so on, and so forth. It pointed out this is the Minnesota 15 Supreme Court; that there were many things that would fall if 16 that distinction fell.

17 That is not true here, because, as everyone 18 recognizes, the rights of domestic partners are virtually 19 identical in most respects -- virtually all respects -- to the 20 responsibilities and obligations of marriage individuals. So 21 that's different.

22 Secondly, another fact that's different is the 18,000
23 marriages that the State of California recognized between 24 same-sex individuals, so you have three classes of persons.

25 And there are other -- the -- the third fact that is

1 different is the whole Romer situation -- California's 2 counterpart to the Romer situation, where a recognized right is 3 taken away from a class of individuals; but those are not the 4 only differences.

5 The Baker case -- the Minnesota Supreme Court in 6 Baker relied on -- referred to the Loving case, which was cited 7 by the proponents of the change, and specifically rejected
8 that, distinguished Loving on the ground that it was a 9 racial -- it was based upon racial considerations.

10 The United States Supreme Court, in Zablocki, 11 specifically addressed that point, and said, "No, no. While 12 Loving involved racial classifications, the right to marry is 13 of fundamental importance to all individuals."

14 So the basis that the -- the Minnesota Supreme Court 15 used as distinguishing Loving is no longer effective.

16 There are other aspects of this. Baker was -- the 17 Baker case did not involve a specific claim of discrimination 18 based upon sexual orientation. I think you noted that in your 19 questions to Mr. Cooper.

20 So that is an issue that's here, but not in that 21 case. The Romer case has been decided since then. The 22 sex-discrimination cases, the law of the Supreme Court has 23 changed; evolved enormously. It was 20 years before the V.M.I.
24 U.S. versus Virginia case in which Justice Ginsburg articulated 25 for the Court different standards for reviewing

1 sexual-discrimination cases.

2 And, importantly, you cited the Turner case for the 3 various different characteristics that make marriage valuable 4 to individuals: the associational right, the liberty right, 5 the privacy right, the spiritual -- spirituality right.

6 That same page from which you were quoting -- right 7 in the very next paragraph, the Turner Court rejects an 8 argument based upon summary affirmance. Of another case
9 involving prisoners and life imprisonment, the Court said, 10 "Well, that involved life imprisonment."

11 This doesn't involve, necessarily, life imprisonment, 12 so we're not going to be bound by or persuaded by the summary
13 affirmance in the case that the Court was referring to there.

14 So there were eight or nine reasons why Baker versus 15 Nelson is not controlling on this Court. And it's not of 16 precedential value if the Court is to do what the Supreme Court 17 has said in the Mandel case and others: to look at how the 18 facts have changed, and the distinctions that have occurred 19 indoctrinally from the Supreme Court. All of those things have 20 changed. The ground has shifted enormously since 1972.

21 THE COURT: All right.

22 MR. OLSON: Now --

23 THE COURT: Now, if there is essentially no 24 difference between the incidents of domestic partnership and 25 marriage, how can denying same-sex couples the term "marriage"

1 constitute an Equal Protection violation?

2 MR. OLSON: Well, there are a number -- in the first 3 place, as our opponents have acknowledged, the entitlement to 4 the recognition by the state as marriage is important in and of 5 itself. It has symbolic personal value to the individuals that 6 are engaged in that relationship.

7 THE COURT: Are there other instances where symbolic 8 significance has -- the denial of symbolic significance has 9 been held to mean an Equal Protection violation?

10 MR. OLSON: I don't know of a direct, specific answer 11 to that in terms a case citation; but let me posit this 12 example.

13 Suppose that the State of California decided -- and 14 it could have decided something like this a hundred years 15 ago -- that if you came from another country and you went 16 through the various processes and you had lived here for a 17 while, you would be entitled to all of the characteristics of 18 citizenship -- you could vote; you could do all of the things 19 that citizens did -- but you could not call yourself a citizen.

20 That is is a significant difference. And I think -- 21 and there's no question that you, the Ninth Circuit, the 22 United States Supreme Court would have said that is a denial of 23 Equal Protection to say that you are a little bit different; 24 you will be characterized differently; you will have to explain 25 to your children.

1 Now, I'm not just saying this from the standpoint of 2 the plaintiffs, which can prove, if we do have the trial, that 3 there are various different ways -- and we're in the midst of 4 discovery, as you know, with respect to various different 5 facets of the case; facts which you said you thought might be 6 important for us to prove.

7 That is one of the things we could prove, but I 8 submit that it is self-evident that, to say -- and the -- and 9 the Defendant-Intervenors admit this -- that it is a very 10 important quality. In fact, they defend -- the whole defense 11 of their case is that it is really a meaningful distinction 12 when you call it "marriage." It means so much to so many 13 people, the individuals affected, the people that are viewing 14 these individuals affected, their neighbors, their employers, 15 and so forth.

16 Plus the government, in connection with the defense
17 of DOMA case, referred to -- when DOMA was coming along, 18 referred to something over a thousand different distinctions at 19 the federal level that are affected by whether the state 20 recognizes your relationship as marriage.

21 So, while the state is, in a sense, undermined -- and 22 the Attorney General admits it -- any claim that marriage
23 would -- by same-sex individuals would harm any state 24 objectives -- and you were asking questions about that -- the 25 federal government does make a difference. And there are

1 effects of the ability to call oneself marriage --

2 THE COURT: Well, that gets to the point that 3 Mr. Cooper made repeatedly and very ably; and that is, with all 4 of the changes that are going on in the states that are, one by 5 one, recognizing same-sex marriage, and the expansion of 6 domestic-partnership rights, and so forth, aren't you just 7 getting ahead of yourself by asserting this claim under the 8 federal constitutional provisions?

9 MR. OLSON: Well, that would be exactly the same 10 argument that was made and was rejected in Loving versus 11 Virginia.

12 THE COURT: Well, but at that time, if I remember 13 correctly, only about a third of the states prohibited
14 interracial marriage at that time. Is that not correct?

15 MR. OLSON: That's correct, but there was a trend in 16 the direction of states eliminating those prohibitions that 17 were -- the U.S. Supreme Court held to be unconstitutional.

18 THE COURT: Right.

19 MR. OLSON: We don't say to the people in this 20 country, "Wait until the population agrees that your 21 constitutional rights can be recognized."

22 THE COURT: Why, then, did the Supreme Court wait
23 from 1948, when California decided the Perez case, to 1960 -- 24 what was it? '64?

25 MR. OLSON: '67, in Loving.

1 THE COURT: '67 in Loving. Almost 30 years; 20
2 years.

3 MR. OLSON: I know what Justices of the Supreme Court 4 would say. "We don't determine our own agenda. We have to 5 wait until a case comes to us."

6 Why did the Supreme Court -- and, in fact, the fact 7 that there was that 20-some-year difference doesn't mean that 8 it was constitutional in 1965, two years before Loving, or 9 1961, six years before. That doesn't mean it was 10 constitutional during that period of time.

11 When the Supreme Court rendered that decision in 12 Loving, it said that that practice that had been practiced and 13 the -- and the state of Virginia was making the same arguments
14 that Mr. Cooper was making: it's been that way for a long, 15 long time, and therefore, it ought to stay that way.

16 The Supreme Court said, "No. That violates the 17 constitutional rights of those individuals."

18 The people that we represent in this case --

19 THE COURT: Well, when did same-sex marriage become 20 unconstitutional?

21 MR. OLSON: Well, the Supreme Court of the State of 22 California --

23 THE COURT: The prohibition of same-sex marriage 24 become unconstitutional?

25 MR. OLSON: It didn't become unconstitutional,

1 your Honor.

2 We submit that when the Supreme Court of California 3 decided that it violated the State's Constitution, it was 4 deciding what the State of California Constitution required
5 from its beginning. It had not been recognized.

6 And the United States Supreme Court says that when it 7 decides a constitutional question, it isn't deciding 8 prospectively what the Constitution means; it is deciding what 9 the law is, in the words of Marbury versus Madison.

10 So what we're asking you is to declare in this case 11 ultimately what the law is; and that is that it is 12 unconstitutional.

13 THE COURT: But what makes a single Federal District
14 Judge in San Francisco able to recognize these profound 15 constitutional principles that 52 or -3 percent of the people 16 of the State of California could not?

17 MR. OLSON: That is why you are there. And that is 18 why we have a federal Constitution. That is why we have a 19 federal judiciary. And that is the obligation that's given to 20 you when you took the oath of office.

21 Whether or not the City of Cleburne case by the 22 United States Supreme Court, the Religious Freedom Restoration 23 Act, and that whole lineup of cases -- the argument was being 24 made in that case that, 97 to one or 97 to zero, the Senate of 25 the United States had voted for this enactment.

1 It didn't make any difference when it came to the 2 United States Supreme Court. If it was unconstitutional, it's 3 unconstitutional. And it is your burden to recognize that if 4 you come to that conclusion, that you -- whether or not 5 52 percent or 51 percent or whatever percentage of the voters 6 of the State of California are, they do not decide federal 7 Constitutional questions.

8 My opponents' 123 pages of argumentation, and the 9 very --

10 THE COURT: I think it was 117. Give him credit for 11 six pages.

12 MR. OLSON: I thought it was 98, and 25 of them --
13 maybe it was 98 and 15.

14 THE COURT: Well, it may have seemed like that.

15 MR. OLSON: It seemed like that when I got to about 16 page 15, your Honor --

17 THE COURT: All right.

18 MR. OLSON: -- but that exhaustive presentation of 19 arguments and the arguments that Mr. Cooper, as you said, very 20 articulately made today are virtually identical to the very 21 same points made by Justice Scalia in his opinions in Romer and 22 Lawrence, but those were dissenting opinions.

23 The majority of the Court -- six justices in each of 24 those cases -- rejected what Justice Scalia had to say, and 25 rejected, therefore, what Mr. Cooper is saying. And at the end

1 of his dissent, Mr. Cooper pointed out that Justice Kennedy, in 2 his opinion for the Court in Lawrence, said, "We're not 3 deciding relationships such as marriage," but Justice Scalia 4 knew he was defeated.

5 And at the end of his dissenting opinion, 6 Justice Scalia said -- he had acknowledged that defeat. He 7 said, "What justification could there possibly be for denying 8 the benefit of marriage to homosexual couples exercising the 9 liberty protected by the Constitution? Surely not the 10 encouragement of procreation," he added, "since the sterile and 11 the elderly are allowed to marry."

12 THE COURT: Perhaps it shows why dissenters shouldn't 13 always write an opinion?

14 MR. OLSON: It hasn't discouraged Justice Scalia.

15 As much as I respect him, he was outvoted in those 16 two cases, but he was right about that point. What is the 17 justification?

18 We do have a difference -- Mr. Cooper and I -- with 19 respect to this right of marriage that the Supreme Court has 20 mentioned over and over again, and has said is among the most 21 fundamental rights, if not the most fundamental right. It is a 22 right of the individual. It is not a right granted by the 23 state. It's a right of an individual.

24 And Mr. Cooper's arguments about the right -- the 25 recognition of marriage as serving procreational values might

1 well be true; I mean, it might be true that allowing people of 2 opposite sex to marry or have the institution of marriage might 3 have some -- scarcely provable, as you pointed out, because of 4 the number of children that are born out of wedlock, if you 5 didn't get into the statistics about the number of divorces.

6 Mr. Cooper talks about the importance of children 7 being raised by both of their biological parents. The 8 recognition -- the exclusion of same-sex individuals to the 9 relationship of marriage doesn't change any of those things; 10 nor does the recognition -- the recognition of same-sex 11 individuals to marry will not harm the right of heterosexual 12 couples to get married. It doesn't have any effect on 13 procreation.

14 And if the whole thing is about procreation, what if 15 California decided tomorrow: we have a population explosion.
16 We can't feed all of the people. Let's not -- let's discourage 17 procreation. Let's stop this right of marriage.

18 If the -- if my opponents are right --

19 Let's take away marriage, because we want to 20 discourage procreation.

21 I have no doubt that the Supreme Court would say that 22 that was unconstitutional.

23 I think, because we covered so thoroughly in our 24 reply brief, and I --

25 THE COURT: Well, let's talk about rational basis.

1 Mr. Cooper argues very effectively that if 2 Proposition 8 is assessed under the rational basis standard, 3 then there is a rational basis in the tradition and history of 4 opposite-sex marriage. Why isn't he absolutely correct?

5 MR. OLSON: Because he's asking the wrong question.
6 He's saying: is there a rational basis for opposite-sex 7 couples to get married?

8 Of course, there's a rational basis for that. And 9 there's --

10 THE COURT: Sometimes there's not a rational basis.

11 MR. OLSON: That's -- someone once told me that's the 12 elevation of hope over experience.

13 THE COURT: Hope over experience, right.

14 Dr. Johnson, I think it was. All right.

15 MR. OLSON: But that's the wrong question.

16 THE COURT: Why?

17 MR. OLSON: Because, as the Court taught us in Romer
18 and as the Court taught us in Lawrence, it's the exclusion that 19 has to be -- there has to be a rational basis for the 20 classification. And the classification is excluding a group of 21 individuals which the Supreme Court said in those cases is a 22 distinct class of individuals.

23 The Court has to determine whether -- and the state 24 has to establish a rational basis for the exclusion of those 25 individuals.

1 THE COURT: Well, Mr. Cooper has said, "Look. This 2 train is moving down the track": Massachusetts, Maine, various 3 other states, Iowa, and so forth. Why isn't it rational for 4 California to sit back and see how this plays out, and decide 5 at some point or other whether it wants to get on board or not 6 get on board? Why isn't that perfectly rational?

7 MR. OLSON: Is it a rational?

8 I would ask, rhetorically: is it rational to say to 9 individuals who may have a constitutional right to be married 10 that you have got to wait until that popular evolution takes 11 place?

12 That has never been in any case that has been cited
13 to me that I remember reading. In Mr. Cooper's excellent 14 briefs, there is no case that says, "Well, the idea the state 15 doesn't want to do it now, but might want to recognize it 16 later" -- that's not a rational basis.

17 The Court in Lawrence and the Court in Romer -- and 18 there are other cases, too, but those, of course, stand out, 19 because they focus directly on this issue -- say that common 20 sense must be applied to the rational-basis thing.

21 THE COURT: Lawrence was a criminal statute.

22 We're not dealing with a criminal statute here.
23 There's no criminal penalty that's involved. It's simply the 24 denial of the incidents or the terminology of marriage to 25 individuals who otherwise would seek it.

1 MR. OLSON: Well, what Lawrence said was not that not 2 only could the state not prosecute the conduct, but that the 3 conduct was protected; the intimate conduct between individuals 4 was protected; was a protected liberty interest under the 5 Constitution, protected by Constitution. So the conduct itself
6 is protected by the Constitution.

7 To say that, well, we can't put someone in jail for 8 engaging in constitutionally protected activity, but we can 9 deny them rights we give to other people because of that 10 conduct -- because of that -- that is the conduct that connotes 11 the relationship between same-sex individuals.

12 That -- when the Supreme Court has said -- and it 13 says it in Romer, too -- cutting these people out because of 14 that conduct, because of that label we give to that conduct, 15 and take away the rights that the state has recognized is 16 unconstitutional.

17 And in Lawrence -- and that's why Justice Scalia said 18 what he did; because he said, "You can't say that it would not 19 apply to marriage." He points out if you are concerned at all 20 about logic and principle, you can't get to that point by 21 limiting Lawrence to a criminal context, and then say that the 22 practice itself is protected by the Constitution, but because 23 you engage in that practice, you can't have the same rights as 24 other citizens in the State of California.

25 The questions you are asking are a part, I submit, of 1 some of the reasons procreation doesn't require marriage.

2 The -- the other part --

3 Let me interrupt myself.

4 The other part of what Mr. Cooper says is that if you 5 can envision any conceivable argument at all, then -- then the 6 prohibition on same-sex marriage must stand. That's not the 7 test.

8 And, as you pointed out, if you can't -- if you can, 9 hypothetically imagine: Well, California doesn't want to 10 become a marriage mill.

11 I mean, that's nonsense. I submit it's not a good 12 argument.

13 California doesn't want its citizens to have rights
14 in California, and then be denied those rights in other states.

15 I could go through the various points that were made 16 by our opponents in their brief about what the rational basis 17 would be. They don't make any sense.

18 What does -- what -- the reason why they keep coming 19 back to procreation and the raising of children is that that 20 might be a rational basis, but it doesn't work in terms of 21 excluding individuals who wish to marry someone of the same 22 sex, because procreation doesn't require marriage, as your 23 question pointed out. Marriage doesn't yield procreation.

24 Same-sex marriage does not dilute, diminish, inhibit, 25 or deter opposite-sex persons from getting marriage.

1 And the prohibition of same-sex marriage doesn't mean 2 that individuals who would prefer to be married to someone of 3 the same sex is going to go out and marry someone of the 4 opposite sex, produce children, and raise them in a happy
5 relationship. That blinks reality.

6 All of those arguments that are made about -- you 7 asked the point: if you had to prove that there was a harm by 8 allowing same-sex marriages to exist alongside heterosexual 9 marriages, what would that harm be?

10 And I think I heard Mr. Cooper say he didn't know.

11 Now, he's spent a lot of time on this case. And I
12 don't know, either, what the harm could be to heterosexual 13 marriages by allowing same-sex marriage. What it comes back to 14 is the phrase that you see over and over again in the briefs of 15 my opponents: the traditional definition of marriage.

16 THE COURT: Tradition is not an unimportant
17 consideration when it comes to interpreting constitutional 18 principles.

19 MR. OLSON: It is not.

20 THE COURT: It's very important, isn't it?

21 MR. OLSON: It is the -- but it is not dispositive.
22 And that's what the Court said in the Illinois case, where, 23 when the Supreme Court of the United States says centuries of 24 tradition --

25 THE COURT: The Illinois case?

1 MR. OLSON: Winter?

2 MR. BOUTROUS: Williams.

3 MR. OLSON: Williams versus Illinois. It's the case 4 that said that no longer may we in this country put someone in 5 jail because they can't pay the fine $30 or 30 days, which we 6 used to see here on television. The Supreme Court said, 7 "Centuries of tradition does not mean that we can continue to 8 put people in jail because they can't pay the fine."

9 The same argument was made in Lawrence. Years, 10 decades of tradition of prohibiting conduct -- that was 11 mentioned in Lawrence.

12 Yes, tradition is important, but the tradition that 13 we're talking about here is marriage. It has been recognized 14 in the past for a long time as a relationship between 15 individuals of the opposite sex. We can see that. There's no 16 argument about that; but the points you were making, I think, 17 by reading that paragraph or two from the Turner case, is what 18 the Supreme Court has said. It is the right of an individual 19 to associate oneself in a permanent relationship with an 20 individual of one's choice.

21 None of those Supreme Court decisions preclude 22 recognition of the -- the status of a marriage between people 23 of the same sex.

24 And if the interests are privacy, liberty, 25 spiritual -- spirituality, a union with another individual, the

1 same things that Justice O'Connor was talking about in the 2 Turner case that made marriage so important, then those things 3 apply with equal force to people who are of the opposite sex, 4 and the -- whatever interests of the state are served by 5 marriage between opposite-sex individuals.

6 I have yet to see anyone identify a harm to that 7 relationship by allowing someone else who has a loving 8 relationship such as the plaintiffs in this case: the loving 9 relationship with another individual of the same sex. That is 10 not harming. That is not --

11 THE COURT: In your view, what are the state 12 interests that are advanced by permitting opposite-sex 13 marriages?

14 MR. OLSON: The right -- I'll use the words of the 15 Supreme Court.

16 The recognition by the state of the value of a 17 relationship between two individuals and -- and the recognition 18 by the state of the unity of that, and that that provides 19 stability and an acknowledgment that this is a good 20 relationship. It forms the back -- backbone for our society.

21 It doesn't mean that those people must procreate or 22 can procreate.

23 You married a couple just recently -- a 95-year-old 24 person and an 87-year-old person, or something like that. And 25 my mother was married three years ago. And she, at the time,

1 was 87, and married someone who was the same age. I don't mean 2 to bring this down to particular examples of individuals; but 3 we want in our society the relationship between -- the loving, 4 stable relationship between the individuals, because that's 5 good for the stability of our society and the relationships of 6 people to one another.

7 That -- every single one of those things apply to 8 people of the same sex.

9 THE COURT: Now, are we in a different situation in 10 this case, Mr. Olson, because, as matters have been left by the 11 California Supreme Court after the Strauss case, it has left 12 this intact: some 18,000 marriages that were performed between 13 the marriage cases in the Strauss case?

14 And, perhaps even more complicated now, in some 15 sense, because, although I haven't read the Bill, it's my 16 understanding the Legislature has authorized recognition of 17 out-of-state-performed marriages in California. Does that put 18 a different wrinkle on this case that would, say, not apply in 19 a case that didn't have that particular history?

20 MR. OLSON: Yes. And that's one of the reasons why 21 this case is completely unlike Baker versus Nelson. That was 22 not the case in Minnesota in 1972.

23 Yes, we have pointed out in our complaint and in our 24 briefs that the irrationality is brought into bright focus by 25 California saying that some people who are heterosexuals can

1 get married; homosexuals -- gay and lesbian people -- can stay
2 married if they were married. 18,000 couples who were married 3 during that period -- we will recognize those marriages; but 4 gays and lesbians who weren't married during that window cannot 5 be married. That's three classes of individuals.

6 And now you're mentioning -- and I did read the same 7 thing that the Legislature is proposing. And I think the 8 Governor said he would sign a Bill that would provide those 9 rights to people who were married outside of the state.

10 We have a crazy quilt of relationships in California.

11 THE COURT: What's the implication of that? I know I 12 didn't allow the Intervenors from the Alliance Group, who 13 wanted to argue that these 18,000 marriages were invalidly 14 performed and should be annulled in some fashion. Mr. Cooper 15 is not taking that position, but isn't that the -- a logical 16 conclusion to be drawn from the crazy-quilt situation that 17 you've described?

18 MR. OLSON: Well, I don't think that it would -- 19 under -- I haven't heard an argument that would say there was a 20 federal constitutional right that somehow has to be undone
21 because California, under its law, has recognized those 18,000
22 relationships.

23 What it does do, your Honor, it seems to me, is to 24 point out the irrationality of the distinctions that are being 25 made; because whether we talk about rational basis or what we

1 believe the heightened scrutiny that would apply because of 2 gender discrimination or -- or strict scrutiny -- the reasons
3 that would justify that pattern of recognition of relationships
4 in California do not make sense.

5 THE COURT: Well, does that mean that you could 6 prevail in this case against Proposition 8, but that would not 7 necessarily establish a basis to overturn a similar provision 8 in a state that had never recognized same-sex marriages?

9 MR. OLSON: That is entirely possible because, I 10 mean, the exercise that you, as a Judge, go through is to look 11 at the facts of the situation.

12 What the Mandel Court said, when you do look at 13 summary affirmance, is: what are the facts of the situation?
14 What doctrinal changes are being made?

15 I would say that many of the arguments that we are 16 making could be made in a state that has never recognized any 17 same-sex marriages, but they are enhanced and put into very 18 sharp focus by the strange pattern that now exists in 19 California.

20 And one other part of that is that -- what if one of 21 those 18,000 couples gets divorced, and then they decide they'd 22 like to remarry? Can they in California, or can't they in 23 California?

24 THE COURT: Well, they can go to Massachusetts.

25 MR. OLSON: Well, but they shouldn't have to, if they

1 have a constitutional right to be married in this state and a
2 constitutional right not to be treated as a second-class 3 citizen in this state and a constitutional right not to be put 4 in a separate class and -- and treated irrationally. We think, 5 your Honor, that it is very clear.

6 And I want to make a point that Mr. Cooper made at 7 the very beginning -- he's made it before -- that we are -- we 8 are making an argument that everyone who supported 9 Proposition 8 or was opposed to same-sex marriage is a bigot.

10 We are not making that point, and we do not believe 11 that to be the case. And, if anything has been said by anyone, 12 I expressly disavow it.

13 What we're saying is that there may be an animus, as 14 the Supreme Court has said, against certain practices. There 15 may be a feeling that certain relationships just aren't the 16 same thing.

17 Mr. Cooper calls the idea of same-sex marriage
18 radical, and novel, and that sort of thing. Well, many people 19 might feel that that relationship is radical or novel or just 20 not right. And they might feel that should be -- it always 21 should be the way it is.

22 That's what we mean by an animus towards the 23 relationship or towards the conduct which the Supreme Court has 24 said is constitutionally protected.

25 What California has done is created a

1 classification -- individuals who are gay or lesbian -- and put 2 them in a different status with respect to rights accorded by 3 the State of California: recognition of the fundamental right 4 of marriage.

5 That is constitutionally impermissible. It violates 6 the Due Process clause, and it violates the Equal Protection 7 clause.

8 If anything, the motion by the proponents for summary 9 judgment has illustrated the fact that judgment, in fact, 10 should be entered in favor of the plaintiffs, and that 11 injunction that we seek, which we hope we will have an 12 opportunity to talk to you about again on January 11th, should 13 be granted.

14 THE COURT: Very well. Thank you, Mr. Olson.

15 Do you want a quick rebuttal, Mr. --

16 MR. COOPER: Cooper.

17 THE COURT: -- Cooper?

18 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, I would appreciate a few 19 moments, if you don't mind.

20 THE COURT: Sure.

21 MR. COOPER: First of all, with respect to this 22 repeated point that the burden is on us to show that some harm 23 would come forward if same-sex couples were included within the 24 definition of marriage is simply not right under rational basis 25 review.

1 We simply and only have to show that the rational 2 purpose that is served by the traditional definition of 3 marriage is one that would not be served or not served as well 4 if the excluded group was included.

5 THE COURT: Take up the --

6 MR. COOPER: That's what makes it rational.

7 THE COURT: Take up the point that Mr. Olson made, 8 that the -- as he put it, the crazy-quilt fashion in which this 9 issue has developed in California --

10 MR. COOPER: Yes.

11 THE COURT: -- might very well result in what at 12 first glance might appear to be an anomalous situation, in that 13 Proposition 8 is unconstitutional, but that a similar provision 14 in a state that had never permitted same-sex marriage might 15 not.

16 MR. COOPER: Your Honor --

17 THE COURT: What's your response to that?

18 MR. COOPER: Well, certainly it is true that, as a 19 result of the California Supreme Court's decision in the 20 Strauss case, there are some number of valid same-sex marriages 21 in -- in this state.

22 And that isn't -- that isn't a surprising or unusual 23 phenomenon when a state makes a decision to step back and, say, 24 repeal a measure that went beyond what the Constitution of the 25 federal government required them to do, and to step back and go

1 back to a previous policy.

2 If you analogize this case to the Crawford case,
3 there is nothing in the Constitution that prevents them.

4 And grandfathering the individuals who were married 5 during that interregnum is not an unusual phenomenon in the 6 law. They were simply grandfathered.

7 THE COURT: Are there analogous situations?

8 MR. COOPER: I'm sorry?

9 THE COURT: Are there analogous situations?

10 MR. COOPER: I think there are analogous situations
11 every time you have a change in the law, but you don't apply it 12 retroactively.

13 The California Supreme Court concluded that 14 Proposition 8 does not apply retroactively. Whether that was 15 right or not, as a matter of interpretation, that was their 16 ruling. And it obviously is binding. And they concluded that 17 the individuals -- it should not be retroactive, because there 18 were reliance interests that were at stake that were important.
19 So those individuals were grandfathered.

20 Does that create some new constitutional -- does 21 that, by itself, render Proposition 8 unconstitutional?

22 No, your Honor, it doesn't.

23 And, to the extent the crazy-quilt character of it 24 that Mr. Olson has referenced would threaten the 25 Constitutionality of either the Proposition 8 or the laws

1 that -- under which these marriages that he's referencing --
2 this new law that Mr. Olson referenced, and the 18,000
3 grandfathered marriages came into collision, then I think, 4 under standard federal constitutional remedial practice, the 5 policy contained in Proposition 8 would have to prevail.

6 So if there's -- if -- if something has to fall here, 7 it not going to be Proposition 8, which is the most prominent 8 and forceful voice of the State of California with respect to 9 the policy on this.

10 And the case of Heckler against Matthews, at 465 U.S.
11 728, I believe, supports that proposition.

12 Your Honor, with respect to --

13 THE COURT: The name of that case, again, is what?

14 MR. COOPER: Heckler against Matthews, 465 U.S. 728.

15 THE COURT: Is that a Social Security case of some 16 kind?

17 MR. COOPER: Honestly, your Honor, you may have a 18 better recollection. I'm not recalling.

19 THE COURT: Okay.

20 MR. COOPER: But, your Honor, with respect to the 21 point that it's simply not rational for the State of California
22 to wait, and if there's a constitutional right at stake, I 23 agree with Mr. Olson on that; but that begs the question. He 24 assumes the existence of his constitutional right. And if, in 25 fact, there's a constitutional right for same-sex couples to

1 get married, then the State of California can't wait to see how 2 this experiment in going to unfold in other jurisdictions.

3 But, your Honor, if the issue before you is: is 4 there a rational basis for Proposition 8; any rational
5 explanation for the policy contained in Proposition 8?

6 We would submit that one of the rational bases and 7 purposes that it serves is to allow the people of California to 8 wait and to see how this experiment unfolds, and to assess 9 whatever harms either may or may not follow from that 10 innovation.

11 With respect to the Loving case, your Honor, that 12 involved an explicit racial prohibition on individuals getting 13 married. It went to the heart of the Equal Protection clause 14 of the Fourteenth Amendment. It was tested under strict 15 scrutiny. No question about it; it was not at all neutral.
16 It, on its face, was designed to preserve the shameful concept
17 of white supremacy. There was no rational reason for it 18 whatsoever; in fact, certainly not procreation. It was the 19 procreative capacity and purpose of marriage that was its very 20 reason for existing. The white supremacists didn't want that 21 ancient purpose of marriage to be fulfilled with interracial 22 couples.

23 So, your Honor, the case's just completely -- it is 24 completely nonauthoritative with respect to this much, much 25 different question.

1 Justice Scalia -- I, too, certainly, admire him very 2 much.

3 This is one occasion --

4 THE COURT: Well, let's make three of us.

5 MR. COOPER: This is an occasion when, to be sure, at 6 least I wish he hadn't written that dissent; but, your Honor, 7 it -- because it -- it forces me to present to you the 8 proposition that he was simply wrong in that decision.

9 He references what is -- and we submit to you is the 10 central purpose of marriage: procreation. And he says that 11 that wouldn't -- that wouldn't justify opposite-sex marriage, 12 because of infertility.

13 Your Honor, there is no understanding of marriage, no 14 definition of marriage, no purpose of marriage, we would submit 15 to you, in which all of the participants that the state has no 16 choice but to allow to get married or not fulfill completely.

17 How would the state, even if it constitutionally 18 could, restrict marriage to those individuals who either were 19 able to or desired to have children? How could it possibly 20 police that restriction, your Honor? With premarital fertility 21 tests?

22 A number of Courts have addressed this -- this issue.
23 And they have recognized that's just not -- that is not a valid 24 objection to the opposite-sex definition of marriage.

25 And if that is an objection to the opposite-sex

1 definition of marriage, it is even greater objection to the 2 definition of marriage that has been presented to you today by 3 the plaintiffs: that its purpose is loving, committed 4 relationships.

5 How could that -- how could -- how could marriage be 6 restricted to that?

7 It wouldn't. That isn't -- and it couldn't be,
8 your Honor.

9 So the point is that the institution of marriage, 10 like all institutions, are designed for the general case; for 11 the usual -- the usual case.

12 And certainly we don't prevent opposite couples who 13 don't intend to have -- have kids, but the state has an 14 interest in still channeling them in their sexual activity, in 15 case they have kids, notwithstanding their planning. That is 16 not -- that is not a phenomenon that can exist with respect to 17 same-sex couples, your Honor.

18 And, your Honor, if it is true, as the plaintiffs 19 suggest -- if it is true that the universal eligibility 20 restriction of opposite-sex couples in marriage must fall for 21 these reasons, then it is very difficult to see how, in -- 22 in -- in a judicial terrain in which procreation was not 23 accepted as a rational basis for the traditional definition of 24 marriage, it is very difficult to understand how the other 25 familiar eligibility restrictions for marriage could possibly

1 survive under the new legal regime.

2 Your Honor, there's -- we don't see what rational 3 basis there would be, then, to distinguish between loving, 4 committed couples of the same sex versus the opposite sex
5 versus siblings, for example, or -- nor are the age-old 6 restrictions based upon the number of individuals in the 7 marital relationship.

8 THE COURT: Well, there are --

9 MR. COOPER: Possibly survive --

10 THE COURT: There are possibly quite different 11 considerations there, are there not, Mr. Cooper?

12 You have considerations of abusive relationships that 13 appear in polygamous relationships or in relationships that are 14 incestuous. Those are quite different situations, aren't they?

15 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor, the question would 16 have to be: well, what rationale?

17 THE COURT: Well, the rationale is the abuse that 18 often accompanies those kinds of relationships.

19 MR. OLSON: Well, your Honor, there is -- there is -- 20 there's abuse that accompanies other kinds of relationships,
21 your Honor.

22 THE COURT: There's certainly abuse that accompanies 23 what you characterize as traditional marriage. That is 24 certainly true --

25 MR. COOPER: Yes.

1 THE COURT: -- but I do think it is probable those 2 dangers are palpable in polygamous and incestuous relationships
3 in a way that they are not in traditional marriage. So I don't 4 know that that argument --

5 MR. COOPER: Well, your Honor, that -- I would --

6 THE COURT: -- is very persuasive.

7 MR. COOPER: Just to refer you to our briefing for 8 further -- further argument on that point, but I want also 9 finally to address the issue of the nomenclature; a question 10 you put to Mr. Olson.

11 We agree that certainly in this context, as in many 12 others, the name "marriage" means a lot. It does have, by -- 13 by virtue of its ancient and venerable heritage, an imprimatur 14 that is -- that is special; but it nonetheless follows that it 15 is entirely rational for the State of California and for 16 virtually all other states to establish parallel institutions 17 for these two very different types of relationships; different, 18 at least, insofar as the purposes of marriage that we have 19 articulated to you -- these very different types of 20 relationships, and to call them by different names, your Honor.
21 It is not irrational to call different things by different 22 names.

23 And -- and I don't think that raises any question 24 with respect to Mr. Olson's hypothetical about a citizen who 25 was, for some reason, not called a citizen.

1 I can't think of a rational distinction to be drawn
2 between one citizen and another, although that might well
3 depend upon the context. It might well.

4 If one citizen is competing with another for a job or 5 a college admission, and there are Affirmative Action programs 6 in place, it may well be that there are ethnic-based names that 7 will attach to different citizens for consideration of those 8 governed purposes; but in the mine run of cases, I can't 9 imagine any rational basis for simply calling citizens by 10 different names.

11 There is a rational basis to call a domestic 12 partnership, your Honor, and a marriage by different names.

13 THE COURT: All right.

14 MR. COOPER: Thank you very much, your Honor.

15 THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Cooper.

16 And thank you, Mr. Olson.

17 Counsel, what I'm going to suggest is that we take a 18 break; give you a chance to go have some lunch. And then come 19 back at one o'clock, and I'll have ruling for you.

20 (Recess taken from 11:53 a.m. until 1:00 p.m.)

21 THE COURT: Very well, counsel. Good afternoon. I 22 hope you've had a chance to do a little relaxing over the past 23 hour.

24 First of all, I want to commend and thank you both 25 for extremely able arguments, both in written form and here

1 this morning. Obviously, it's a great pleasure to have an 2 exceedingly interesting and important case presented by such 3 able counsel.

4 I'm always a little hesitant, I confess, to hand out
5 compliments like that, because there was a Judge on this court, 6 Judge Peckham, who used to say when I was practicing law, "What 7 a wonderful argument you made, Mr. Walker. Oh, that was so 8 impressive." And then, of course, he'd proceed to rule against 9 me.

10 Well, I guess I have to do that with respect to one 11 of you this morning -- or this afternoon.

12 So let me proceed to that. And then we'll take up 13 the other matters that we need to discuss going forward.

14 The Defendant-Intervenors, which everyone has been 15 characterizing and calling the "proponents" -- and I think 16 that's an appropriate terminology -- have moved for a summary 17 judgment that Proposition 8 does not violate the 18 Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process or Equal Protection Clauses.

19 In their motion papers, proponents identify five 20 issues that they claim entitle them to summary judgment.

21 One, Baker versus Nelson, a 1972 Supreme Court
22 decision, requires the Court to hold plaintiffs have not raised 23 a substantial federal question.

24 Two, there is no fundamental right to same-sex
25 marriage under the Due Process clause.

1 Three, Proposition 8 should receive rational basis
2 review under the Equal Protection clause.

3 Four, Proposition 8 satisfies rational basis review,
4 because it is rationally related to several legitimate state
5 interests.

6 And, five, Proposition 8 is not tainted by animus or 7 other impermissible considerations.

8 As noted at the outset of our discussion this 9 morning, this is a motion for summary judgment governed by 10 Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and the 11 well-known trilogy of Supreme Court decisions -- the Celotex, 12 Anderson versus Liberty Lobby, and Matsushita Electrical 13 Industrial Company versus Zenith Radio Corporation cases -- and 14 their various progeny.

15 Now, despite the heft of the papers that have been 16 submitted, the effect of proponents' motion is considerably 17 more limited than might at first glance appear.

18 Of the five motions for summary judgment, only a 19 determination favorable to proponents on issue one would decide 20 the entire case.

21 With regard to the remaining issues, proponents'
22 motion would appear to call for analysis under Rule 56(d).
23 That provision has frequently but somewhat misleadingly been 24 characterized as "partial summary judgment," in that, if 25 proponents were to prevail on Issues Three and Four, the entire

1 action would not be decided. Only the standard of review
2 applied to Proposition 8 would be determined.

3 Similarly, a grant of the motion on Issue Two would 4 simply eliminate one of plaintiffs' claims, and a grant in 5 favor of proponents on Issue Five would simply determine that 6 one of the grounds of plaintiffs' attack on Proposition 8 could 7 not proceed.

8 Inevitably, when a Court is faced with a motion for 9 so-called "partial summary judgment," the Court must consider 10 the advisability of adjudicating part of the case on motion 11 when a case will proceed to trial on other issues. A good part 12 of the analysis the Court uses in that situation is whether 13 grant of the motion will significantly shorten or expedite the 14 trial, or whether the issues on which partial summary judgment 15 is sought can better be left for adjudication at trial.

16 In this case, because only Issue One raised by 17 proponents would decide the action as a whole, the Court will 18 turn first to that issue.

19 Now, the question basically is: does Baker versus 20 Nelson entitle Defendant-Intervenors/proponents to judgment as 21 a matter of law?

22 The Court believes that Baker versus Nelson does not 23 settle the dispute that is before the Court in this case.
24 Baker versus Nelson dismissed "for want of a substantial 25 federal question" an appeal from the Minnesota Supreme Court.

1 That Court had held that Minnesota's marriage statutes did not 2 permit marriage for same-sex couples, and that this restriction 3 did not violate the First, Eighth, Ninth, or 4 Fourteenth Amendments.

5 A summary dismissal "for want of a substantial 6 federal question" does constitute a decision on the merits; 7 although it is not entitled to full precedential weight.

8 A summary dismissal prevents a lower court from 9 reaching opposite conclusions on the precise issues presented 10 and necessarily decided in the jurisdictional statement.

11 Lower federal courts should adhere to the view that 12 if the Court has branded a question insubstantial, it remains 13 so except when "doctrinal developments indicate otherwise."

14 If there are later developments that alter or erode 15 the summary disposition's authority, lower courts are not bound 16 by the Supreme Court's characterization of the issue presented 17 as insubstantial.

18 The Court does not agree that Baker is either settled 19 law, or that it addresses the issues plaintiffs have raised 20 here. The jurisdictional statement in Baker dealt with 21 constitutional allegations similar to the challenges in this 22 case, but based on a different set of underlying facts. In 23 Baker, plaintiffs challenged a statute which was interpreted to 24 prohibit same-sex marriage, but was neutral on its face. That 25 is, as stated by the Minnesota Supreme Court, the Minnesota

1 statute at issue in Baker did not contain an express statutory 2 prohibition against same-sex marriage.

3 Proposition 8, by contrast, is not neutral with 4 respect to same-sex and opposite-sex marriage, but expressly 5 distinguishes them, and limits marriage to the latter.

6 Unlike in Minnesota, where same-sex marriage had 7 never been recognized, plaintiffs here challenge California
8 voters' use of the ballot initiative process to strip unmarried 9 gay and lesbian individuals of an existing state constitutional 10 right to marry. Potentially, therefore, Proposition 8 may be 11 invalid, given the history in California, whereas a similar 12 enactment in another state that had never recognized same-sex 13 marriage might not be constitutionally infirm.

14 In addition, there appear to have been significant 15 doctrinal developments on both Equal Protection and Due Process 16 grounds since Baker was summarily dismissed in 1972.

17 Supreme Court cases decided since Baker show that the 18 court does not consider "insubstantial a constitutional 19 challenge brought by homosexual individuals" on Equal 20 Protection or Due Process grounds. The Romer case relied on 21 the Equal Protection clause to invalidate a state 22 constitutional amendment which enough filed specific legal 23 protections for homosexuals.

24 The Court held that home sexuality cannot be singled 25 out for disfavorable treatment, and that the amendment did not

1 further a proper legislative end, but rather classified
2 homosexuals to make them unequal. Plaintiffs' claims are more
3 similar to those made in Romer than those made in Baker, 4 because plaintiffs are challenging an initiative measure which 5 on its face singles out same-sex from opposite-sex
6 relationships.

7 Lawrence versus Texas would also appear to be a
8 significant doctrinal development under the Due Process clause, 9 because it holds that "persons in homosexual relationships may 10 seek autonomy under the Constitution." The Court noted that 11 laws and traditions in the past half century show an "emerging 12 awareness that liberty gives substantial protection to adult 13 persons in deciding how to conduct their private lives in 14 matters pertaining sex." Lawrence makes clear that gays and 15 lesbians are able to rely on the Fourteenth Amendment's Due 16 Process guarantee.

17 Finally, doctrinal developments appear to have 18 altered the landscape for plaintiffs' sex discrimination claim.
19 Baker was decided before the Supreme Court applied intermediate 20 scrutiny to gender discrimination claims. Contemporary Equal
21 Protection doctrine emerged after Baker. Although the Court 22 will address the appropriate standard of review in a few 23 moments, a key fact question appears to be whether 24 Proposition 8 is a gender-neutral enactment or whether, in 25 fact, its operation in practice discriminates on the basis of 1 gender.

2 Accordingly, the Court cannot find on the basis of 3 the present record that Baker entitles proponents to judgment
4 as a matter of law, and thus, the Court turns to proponents'
5 motions for partial summary judgment.

6 Are plaintiffs' Due Process claims foreclosed because 7 there is no fundamental right to marry someone of the same sex?

8 Plaintiffs and proponents agree that marriage is a 9 fundamental right protected by the Due Process clause. There's 10 no dispute among the parties that marriage traditionally has 11 involved opposite-sex relationships.

12 Proponents rely upon Washington versus Glucksberg to 13 argue that the right to same-sex marriage is not grounded in 14 "our nation's history, legal traditions, and practices," and 15 cannot, therefore, be grounded in the Due Process clause.

16 Plaintiffs, on the other hand, argue that the right 17 at stake is not "the right to same-sex marriage," but instead 18 is "the right to freedom of personal choice in matters of 19 marriage."

20 In this, as in many instances in the law, how one 21 poses the question determines the answer. Posing the right at 22 stake as the right to same-sex marriage may point in one 23 direction, while posing the question as the right to marriage 24 points in the other. The Supreme Court cases discussing the 25 right to marry do not define the right at stake in those cases

1 as a subset of the right to marry depending on the factual
2 context in which the issue presented itself.

3 For example, Loving addressed marriage; not 4 interracial or opposite-race marriage. If the Lovings had been 5 asked to demonstrate that interracial marriage was deeply 6 rooted in the nation's history and traditions, they likely 7 would have lost.

8 Turner versus Safley discusses marriage; not marriage
9 involving inmates in penal institutions.

10 Proponents attempt to distinguish same-sex marriage 11 from all other forms of marriage because same-sex marriage does 12 not involve procreation, but they fail to address at least two 13 circumstances in which a right to marry has been recognized 14 without regard to the possibility of procreation.

15 First, the line of authority stemming from Turner
16 allows for marriages that cannot resemble proponents' 17 Definition of traditional marriage, because a prisoner has -- 18 particularly a prisoner with a life sentence and no possibility 19 of parole can still marry, although he cannot provide anything 20 approaching the traditional incidents of parental care, 21 support, or nurture to offspring.

22 Secondly, in when the Court, in Zablocki, overturned
23 the Wisconsin law requiring payment of outstanding child 24 support before marriage, the Court was concerned with an 25 individual's right to marry; not with children. If the right

1 to marry is about "survival of the race," then a child-support
2 restriction would be unobjectionable.

3 The argument that recognition of same-sex marriage
4 simply opens the door to incestuous or polygamous marriage
5 ignores that there may well be compelling state interests 6 against recognizing these other forms of relationships, 7 including preventing exploitation and abuse.

8 Nor is it clear why it is same-sex marriage (and not, 9 for example, infertile marriage) opens the door to require 10 state recognition of polygamy and incest. Whatever prevents 11 California now from recognizing the marriage of a brother and a 12 sister would likewise stop it from recognizing the marriage of 13 two sisters in the absence of Proposition 8.

14 The Court cannot determine that plaintiffs' Due 15 Process claims are foreclosed as a matter of law. Unresolved 16 by the present record, which consists almost exclusively of 17 legal arguments, is the governmental interests that 18 Proposition 8 fosters. Although that may be akin to a 19 legislative fact, as Mr. Cooper has so forcefully and ably 20 argued, embedded within such a legislative fact are certain 21 assumptions about human behavior and relationships that have 22 simply not been developed in the record that is now before the 23 Court. And the presentation of evidence, I believe, is 24 essential to the resolution of the issues insofar as they bear 25 on that legal question.

1 Have plaintiffs raised genuine issues of fact that 2 Proposition 8 may be subject to strict scrutiny or intermediate 3 scrutiny review?

4 Proponents assert that even if plaintiffs can state 5 an Equal Protection claim, that claim must be analyzed under 6 the rational basis review standard.

7 Proponents' first argument asserts that neither the 8 Supreme Court nor circuit courts have recognized heightened 9 scrutiny, and that the Ninth Circuit's decision in High Tech
10 Gays versus Defense Industry Security Clearance Office
11 forecloses any decision to the contrary.

12 Second, proponents assert that even if the Court were 13 free to determine what level of scrutiny to apply, the Court 14 should still apply rational basis review.

15 The Supreme Court has never applied heightened 16 scrutiny to a claim of sexual-orientation discrimination.
17 Romer used rational basis (without discussing what level of 18 scrutiny would be appropriate) and Lawrence, of course, was 19 decided upon Due Process grounds. Nothing in either decision 20 forecloses heightened scrutiny, but neither do these decisions 21 give us much guidance on what standard to apply.

22 In High Tech Gays, the Ninth Circuit reversed the 23 decision of Judge Henderson of this court that a law
24 discriminating against gays and lesbians needed to survive 25 heightened scrutiny. In doing so, the Ninth Circuit relied

1 explicitly on Bowers, and reasoned that if homosexual conduct 2 can be criminalized, then homosexuals cannot constitute a 3 protected class.

4 Well, Lawrence, of course, undermined High Tech Gays.
5 Bowers was subsequently overruled by the Supreme Court's 6 decision in Lawrence.

7 A subsequent decision of the Ninth Circuit, Witt
8 versus department of the Air Force, addressed a challenge to 9 the military's Don't Ask Don't Tell (DADT) policy. Witt
10 applied rational basis review to Witt's Equal Protection 11 claims. Her Equal Protection claims were, however, based on 12 conduct, not sexual orientation; and for that reason it is not 13 clear whether this determination has much bearing on this case.

14 Indeed the Don't Ask Don't Tell policy itself is 15 based on homosexual conduct, or at least expression of such 16 conduct, but not on sexual orientation or definition itself.

17 Proposition 8, by contrast, does not address conduct, 18 but sexual classification or sexual orientation or both.

19 Proponents' point to other circuits that have applied 20 rational basis review to Equal Protection claims based on 21 sexual-orientation discrimination. The cases decided after 22 Lawrence are perhaps the most important. In Cook versus Gates, 23 the First Circuit applied rational basis review to a challenge
24 to the Don't Ask Don't Tell policy, because the Supreme Court 25 had not indicated that sexual orientation should receive

1 heightened scrutiny. The Fifth Circuit applied rational basis
2 to a gay prisoner's Equal Protection claim that guards failed 3 to protect him adequately because of his sexual orientation.
4 And the Sixth Circuit has held that homosexuality is not a 5 suspect class. The Eleventh Circuit agreed with that position.

6 The Supreme Court has been reluctant to expand the 7 list of classifications subject to heightened scrutiny.

8 The mixed precedent on the issue points in the 9 direction that plaintiffs claim that a heightened level of 10 scrutiny is not foreclosed as a matter of law, but requires a 11 complete factual record for decision making.

12 The test whether a group receives heightened scrutiny 13 comes, of course, from the famous footnote four in the Carolene
14 Products case. The four factors used to determine whether a 15 group is a discrete and insular minority are: the history of 16 invidious discrimination against the class burdened by the 17 legislation, the characteristics that distinguish the class as 18 indicating a typical class member's ability to contribute to 19 society, the distinguishing character -- whether the 20 distinguishing characteristic is "immutable" or beyond the 21 class member's control, and the political power of the subject 22 class.

23 Proponents do not present evidence on the first two 24 factors, and appear for purposes of this motion to accept that 25 gays and lesbians have faced discrimination, and contribute

1 equally to society. Instead, proponents focus solely upon the 2 immutability and political power factors. These four factors 3 are generally weighed, and not treated as separate elements.
4 So proponents' failure to dispute the first two claims does, in 5 fact, impair their claim that heightened scrutiny may not apply 6 to the analysis of Proposition 8.

7 Plaintiffs contest proponents' facts relating to 8 immutability and political power. These, I think, are prime 9 issues for trial.

10 For example, while proponents put forth scholarship 11 explaining that an individual's sexual orientation may fall on 12 a continuum, plaintiffs counter that an individual does not 13 experience constant shifts in his or her sexual orientation.

14 Proponents put forth evidence that gays and lesbians
15 have had some political successes.

16 Plaintiffs counter with evidence and a Rule 56(f)
17 affidavit that evidence will be gathered that gays and lesbians 18 have been ignored or mistreated by the political process.

19 The disputed facts on these issues preclude summary
20 judgment at this stage of the proceedings.

21 Proponents also move for summary judgment that 22 Proposition 8 does not discriminate based on sex or gender. If 23 Proposition 8 discriminated based on sex, it would be subject, 24 of course, to intermediate scrutiny. Proponents argue that 25 Proposition 8 treats men and women the same. Either can marry

1 someone of the opposite sex, and neither can marry someone of 2 the same sex. Plaintiffs counter that because the 3 Supreme Court rejected a similar argument in Loving, 4 Proposition 8 discriminates.

5 Proponents point out that most state courts
6 addressing same-sex-marriage bans have found they do not 7 discriminate on the basis of sex. Plaintiffs state that 8 Proposition 8 mandates gender roles in marriage, at least 9 superficially; but the California Supreme Court rejected the 10 sex-stereotyping argument in the Marriage Cases.

11 So I don't believe that at this juncture in the 12 proceedings it possible to determine as a matter of law that a 13 sex-discrimination claim is foreclosed of the plaintiffs.

14 Now, the plaintiffs demonstrated a genuine issue that 15 Proposition 8 is rationally unrelated to a legitimate state 16 interest.

17 Proponents put forth the following state interests:
18 preserving the traditional institution of marriage.

19 Proponents claim that California has an interest in 20 maintaining a definition of marriage that excludes same-sex 21 couples, and in taking an incremental approach to novel social 22 changes. Plaintiffs point to Lawrence's "times can blind us to 23 certain truths, and later generations can see that laws once 24 thought necessary and proper, in fact, serve only to oppress."

25 Tradition alone is not enough, because "the

1 constitutional imperatives of the Equal Protection clause must 2 have priority over the comfortable convenience of the status 3 quo."

4 Plaintiffs dispute the factual basis for proponents'
5 claim that excluding same-sex couples from marriage preserves
6 traditional marriage, and argue that marriage has not had a 7 stable definition across generations.

8 These two point to issues appropriate for a fuller 9 record.

10 Proponents rely upon what they argue to be interests 11 arising out of the male-female procreation process. Proponents 12 maintain that because of the naturally procreative nature of 13 male-female relationships, only opposite-sex marriage can 14 further interests in procreation. These interests include 15 encouraging formation of naturally procreative unions, 16 encouraging stability within naturally procreative unions, and 17 encouraging the bond between parents and biological offspring.
18 Proponents argue that the fit between the law and the interests 19 need not be perfect, and that, therefore, the existence of 20 infertile opposite-sex marriage is irrelevant.

21 Plaintiffs argue that the interests are not 22 rationally related to Proposition 8. Because Proposition 8 23 neither encourages gays and lesbians to marry someone of the 24 opposite sex nor makes it more likely that heterosexuals will 25 marry, Proposition 8, in plaintiffs' view, has nothing to do

1 with the state's interest in procreation. Plaintiff states -- 2 plaintiffs state that facts developed during discovery will 3 demonstrate the absence of this link. Proponents counter that 4 they can, if they must, show a link between the procreative
5 interests and the denial of marriage to same-sex couples, 6 because allowing same-sex marriage shifts the focus of marriage
7 away from families and onto individual desires.

8 Plaintiffs dispute these issues, and claim that 9 proponents' claims state interests in procreation are 10 essentially not the compelling interests that the state has in 11 the marriage estate.

12 And these, I think, again, point in the direction of 13 issues suitable for a fuller development at trial.

14 "California has an interest in ensuring its marriages 15 are recognized in other jurisdictions, and ensuring that it 16 does not become a marriage mill for out-of-state gays" is 17 another basis for the proponents' motion.

18 Because most states and the federal government do not 19 recognize same-sex marriage, proponents claim California has an 20 interest in only issuing marriage licenses that will be 21 recognized in other states.

22 Proponents point to a case in Massachusetts -- a 23 complaint filed by the Attorney General of that state -- 24 challenging the Defense of Marriage Act, because it forces 25 Massachusetts to categorize its marriage licenses. Proponents

1 do not explain how Proposition 8 furthers this supposed
2 interest.

3 Plaintiffs state, as an initial matter, that this 4 interest cannot be furthered by Proposition 8, which allowed at 5 least 18,000 California same-sex marriages to stand.
6 Plaintiffs dispute that California has an interest in 7 preventing out-of-state couples from marrying. Plaintiffs 8 dispute the factual basis for the claimed state interest in not 9 becoming a marriage mill, because marriages do not have the 10 same negative connotation as divorces. The state's interest in 11 not becoming a divorce mill does not lead to a state interest 12 in not becoming a marriage mill.

13 Well, this claimed interest, in the Court's view, is 14 essentially insubstantial, and is not sufficient to warrant as 15 a matter of law that the issue that was raised with respect to 16 the legitimate state interest in Proposition 8 can be 17 determined as a matter of law.

18 Have plaintiffs raised a genuine issue that 19 Proposition 8 is tainted by animus?

20 Finally, proponents ask for summary judgment that 21 Proposition 8 was not passed with animus. First, proponents 22 claim that because Proposition 8 is supported by legitimate 23 interests, animus is legally irrelevant. Their argument stems 24 not from facts, but from a train of logic. Because 25 Proposition 8 acted with surgical precision -- and I'm

1 quoting -- "with surgical precision to preserve and restore the 2 venerable definition of marriage," Californians were not acting 3 with animus, in the proponents' view. The resulting effect on 4 gays and lesbians was "an unavoidable consequence."

5 Additionally, finding Proposition 8 was passed with 6 animus would mean that the Court concludes that everyone who 7 opposes same sex marriage is a bigot.

8 That, I think, is reading far too much into any such 9 determination.

10 Proponents' argument rests on the assumption that the 11 Court accepts that Proposition 8 is supported by legitimate 12 state interests. Plaintiffs point to evidence of the 13 disconnect between the Proposition 8 campaign messages, and the 14 state interests claimed to argue that whether Proposition 8 was 15 passed with a discriminatory intent remains in dispute.

16 So for those reasons, the proponents' motion for a 17 summary judgment will be denied with respect to Baker versus 18 Neslon grounds. And I don't believe that I can, based on the 19 present record, make a determination of the appropriate 20 standard of review to apply when the case is ultimately decided 21 on the merits.

22 Now, with that decision, we have some few 23 case-management matters to discuss. One of them, of course, is 24 the motion for stay that has been filed. And let me ask 25 Mr. Cooper if you wish to file a reply memorandum. I think you

1 have not done so. Is that correct?

2 MR. COOPER: We have not yet, your Honor, had a 3 chance to do so. And, with the Court's permission, if the 4 Court plans to get into any of the substance of the stay
5 application, my colleague, Mr. Nielson, is prepared to address 6 it, but we haven't filed a reply paper.

7 THE COURT: It might be --

8 MR. COOPER: We're content to waive filing a reply.

9 THE COURT: I'm sorry. You're content to?

10 MR. COOPER: Content to waive filing a reply to the 11 response.

12 THE COURT: Well, far be it from me to prevent you 13 from waiving a right to file a reply brief.

14 It may be better if we don't address this on the 15 merits this afternoon.

16 MR. COOPER: Then we would like an opportunity to 17 reply.

18 THE COURT: All right. Well, that's fair enough.
19 And I say that in considerable measure because I'm not sure
20 that I'm as familiar with the issues that have been raised here 21 as I'd like to be before making a determination. And so any 22 further briefing on the subject would probably be helpful.

23 And, rather than bring you all out here again to 24 argue this motion, I'd be prepared either to decide it on the 25 papers or, if I think that further argument would be helpful,

1 perhaps to do that by telephone, so that if we don't argue the 2 motion to stay today, and an oral argument would be helpful to 3 the Court, I'd be happy to set up a conference call. And we 4 could all get on the line and proceed that way. How does that 5 sound to you, Mr. Olson?

6 MR. OLSON: It does --

7 I would like to make, if I might, just one or two 8 points briefly in that connection.

9 THE COURT: Sure.

10 MR. OLSON: Deciding it on the papers would be 11 satisfactory. We would not object to that. And also a 12 telephone argument would be also satisfactory.

13 I did want to make a couple of points with respect to 14 that, and this is not in the form of arguing the merits of it 15 so much as to questions of timing.

16 THE COURT: I've heard that before, Mr. Olson. "I'm 17 not going to argue the merits."

18 MR. OLSON: Well, we'll see if I slip into that.

19 THE COURT: All right.

20 MR. OLSON: We received a letter yesterday from the 21 proponents' counsel. It said, "While a motion for a stay is 22 pending, our clients intend not to produce any documents 23 subject to their claim of a First Amendment privilege. When 24 and if there is no longer a possibility for a stay from any 25 court, then our clients will produce the documents."

1 In other words, the proponents are stating -- I will 2 be willing to stand corrected by Mr. Cooper if I misunderstand 3 this letter, but they are going to resist production of these 4 documents as long as there is an application for stay pending 5 before any court.

6 Therefore, our position is: we're very anxious to 7 have this decided as soon as possible, and we hope that if you 8 decide it to reject the stay application, you order that the 9 documents be produced within a very short period of time.

10 We -- I won't go into the merits.

11 THE COURT: One question I have -- and in fairness to 12 Mr. Cooper, I should put that on the table right now. And he 13 may want to address this in his reply memorandum -- excuse me 14 for interrupting -- is a motion to stay appropriate after a 15 petition for a writ of mandate has been filed in the Court of 16 Appeals?

17 I thought you asked the District Court to stay its 18 Order first, and then you proceed to the Court of Appeals. I 19 wonder what the procedural posture is at the Court of Appeals.

20 MR. OLSON: We would have thought so, too, but I 21 guess Mr. Cooper would answer that.

22 Let me just make one point.

23 THE COURT: All right.

24 MR. OLSON: The final point I was going to make is 25 that if there is a stay of discovery, which your Honor has

1 indicated is appropriate, and your Honor offered a protective 2 order -- and we'd be happy to talk about a protective order, 3 too. So that is something that could be done with respect to 4 this, but if there is a stay of the production of documents,
5 which your Honor has already decided is appropriate for us -- 6 or appropriate for us to seek.

7 THE COURT: Well, of course, I ask you -- your side 8 to reframe that document request, too.

9 MR. OLSON: Yes. And we're willing to do that. So 10 far, we have not been able to get -- that's been resisted, but 11 I understand that. That's a perfectly good point, but if there 12 is a stay that is going to last a long period of time or any 13 substantial period of time, with respect to documents or 14 evidence that you have ruled we are entitled to, our clients 15 are entitled to, we would want to reopen the motion that was 16 considered this summer for a preliminary injunction, because 17 your decision with respect to denying that motion was based 18 upon the premise that there would be a prompt expeditious trial 19 on the merits.

20 Our position is that our clients are suffering
21 constitutional injury. The State of California has admitted 22 that. And they are -- we believe they are entitled; that 23 Proposition 8 be stayed so that they will not suffer every day 24 irreparable and irremediable constitutional injury.

25 We understand that if there is a trial on January 11,

1 then we will be getting the relief that we hope if the Court
2 agrees with us; but if there's going to be delays --

3 THE COURT: Well, fair point.

4 Mr. Cooper.

5 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, we have from the outset been 6 sensitive to the plaintiffs' stated desire to move this case 7 expeditiously. And we have coöperated in every respect with 8 that. We remain sensitive to that concern.

9 And it was in the light of that that we did seek to 10 notice an appeal of the Court's ruling on the discovery issue, 11 with all due respect, of course, and to seek also this Court's 12 stay of that ruling, so that the issue would not be mooted out 13 effectively by the production of the very documents at issue
14 before we had had an opportunity to seek review of the Court's 15 ruling.

16 Obviously, we are -- we are -- we are attempting to 17 do this in the traditional and proper way: seeking the 18 District Court's consideration of a stay of the Court's ruling 19 while we seek appellate review.

20 If that isn't forthcoming, if the Court, in its 21 wisdom, decides to deny the stay, then we would ask the Ninth 22 Circuit to stay the -- stay the ruling, and we'd see what 23 happens.

24 THE COURT: My clerk told me that you had received a 25 briefing schedule from the Ninth Circuit on this. Is that 1 correct?

2 MR. MC GILL: It is.

3 MS. STEWART: I think the briefing schedule that the 4 Ninth Circuit has issued has to do with the appeal from the 5 intervention. Is there a briefing schedule? Matt's correcting 6 me.

7 MR. MC GILL: Go ahead.

8 THE COURT: What's the story?

9 MR. MC GILL: Your Honor, there is a briefing 10 schedule.

11 MR. MC GILL: My name is Matt McGill. Gibson, Dunn &
12 Crutcher.

13 THE COURT: Mr. McGill.

14 MR. MC GILL: There is a briefing schedule.

15 THE COURT: On the motion for --

16 MR. MC GILL: On Mr. Cooper's appeal of your order 17 denying his motion for protective order.

18 THE COURT: And what is that schedule?

19 MR. MC GILL: I believe it calls for the opening 20 briefing to be filed in January.

21 THE COURT: In January?

22 MR. MC GILL: That's correct.

23 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, we've made clear --

24 THE COURT: The Ninth Circuit grinds finely, ever so 25 slowly.

1 MR. COOPER: We have made clear in our notice that we 2 would seek to move to expedite that appeal. We would seek 3 expedited treatment of that; and obviously, we would expect 4 that in these circumstances.

5 And so our attempt here is in no way to try to delay 6 in any unnecessary fashion these proceedings, but it is to -- 7 to exhaust every opportunity and possibility we have for 8 appropriate judicial review of our claim that our First 9 Amendment interests and rights would not be -- would not be 10 preserved if we were required to -- to produce the documents in 11 question.

12 So we're -- we're happy, of course, with the process
13 that the Court has outlined. We -- if the Court wants to rule 14 on the papers or call us back together for a telephonic
15 argument, we'll abide by the Court's wishes, of course.

16 MR. MC GILL: Your Honor, just to confirm, I am able 17 to confirm for you that the opening brief is due on 18 January 25th.

19 THE COURT: January 25th?

20 MR. MC GILL: That's correct.

21 MR. COOPER: This must have just come down. I am 22 not --

23 THE COURT: I wonder if that was just one of their 24 automatic -- one of the automatic orders that they issue from 25 the motions panel.

1 MR. COOPER: I would suspect that's the case. It
2 hasn't gone to a motions panel yet.

3 I mean, in other words, we haven't sought a stay from 4 the Court of Appeals until -- until, obviously, we've heard
5 from you, your Honor, on that issue.

6 THE COURT: You might address that question: whether 7 or not that petition for writ of mandamus is appropriate in the 8 absence of having applied for a stay from the district court.

9 MR. COOPER: Your Honor, the petition is in the 10 alternative. We believe that the -- there is appellate 11 jurisdiction over this interlocutory appeal, under the 12 collateral order doctrine. That's our view of the matter, but 13 certainly it is in the alternative; but yes, we will look at 14 that and address it for the court.

15 THE COURT: All right.

16 MR. COOPER: Absolutely.

17 THE COURT: When do you think you could get your 18 reply brief in, Mr. Cooper?

19 MR. COOPER: Very promptly, your Honor.

20 THE COURT: Good.

21 MR. COOPER: How about the day after tomorrow? Would 22 that be all right?

23 THE COURT: That's fine. That's fine. Absolutely.

24 MR. COOPER: Yeah.

25 THE COURT: All right. I appreciate that.

1 And I understand Mr. Olson's point that if this case
2 gets hung up for a long period of time on discovery issues, 3 then that does change the equation the Court considered at the 4 outset on the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction.

5 So -- and I think it would be unfortunate, as the 6 ruling on the motion for summary judgment indicated, for this 7 case to go up in that posture before there has been a 8 development of the record. For whichever side wins, I think 9 you're going to be benefited by a fuller record. And so I 10 think it would be unfortunate to short-circuit that process to 11 any material degree.

12 What other issues do we have? Any? How about the 13 other discovery? How's that going? Why is it, when it comes 14 to discovery, everybody looks to the younger lawyers?

15 MS. DUSSEAULT: Good afternoon, your Honor.
16 Chris Dusseault, also of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher.

17 The other discovery on which progress is moving 18 forward is the expert discovery. We have exchanged initial 19 expert reports. We are scheduling as we speak, in the area of 20 15 expert depositions that will be happening in the next six 21 weeks or so. So the expert discovery is moving forward.

22 I think the fact discovery is really not moving 23 forward based on the Defendant-Intervenors' motion.

24 THE COURT: Anyway, to bifurcate or segregate those 25 issues?

1 MS. DUSSEAULT: If --

2 THE COURT: If we get hung up on this fact discovery 3 process?

4 MS. DUSSEAULT: It might be something we'd want to 5 discuss. We certainly will be moving forward, full speed
6 ahead, with the experts. Even though, for example, we don't 7 have certain documents that some of our experts might ideally 8 hope to consider in reaching their opinions, we are moving that 9 forward, full speed ahead.

10 Whether it would be possible to, in a bifurcated
11 manner, try any issues without a full factual record, I think, 12 is something we'd need to discuss more fully.

13 THE COURT: Any views on the other side?

14 MR. COOPER: Just this point, your Honor. The only 15 hangup in this discovery process that at least I'm aware of is 16 the -- are these disputed; this disputed category of documents?
17 We've already produced a large volume of documents to the 18 plaintiffs that we haven't disputed in response to their fact 19 discovery and their document requests.

20 So the only -- the only hangup I know of is this.
21 And, yes, the expert discovery is going forward. We've 22 exchanged reports, according to the Court's --

23 THE COURT: Schedule?

24 MR. COOPER: -- the Court's schedule. Yes.

25 And it was quite a back-breaking process, but we all

1 have done that, and so those depositions go forward I don't see 2 those as being in any way related or hung up on this other.

3 THE COURT: All right. What else can anybody offer
4 for the good of the Order?

5 Oh, the clerk has reminded me of another matter.

6 The clerk has reminded me to ask about the motion to 7 realign Mr. Cooper. Do you want to realign the Attorney 8 General? Or maybe "reorient" him would be a better way to put 9 it.

10 MR. COOPER: It is with no disrespect to our friends.
11 For the Attorney General, we have asked the Court to realign
12 the Attorney General as a party plaintiff. Yes, your Honor.
13 And we set forward our bases and the authorities we think 14 support that in our papers. There has been no response to them 15 as of yet. The Court's calendar evidently, you know, when -- 16 under the Court's rules, as I understand it, you identify the 17 next available calendar date. And so that's quite a ways down 18 the road. And so there's been no briefing that has proceeded 19 on this yet.

20 THE COURT: Well, why don't we set a briefing on 21 this, so we get that issue fully briefed?

22 MR. OLSON: I was only going to say: one thing in 23 connection with that is we have brought a lawsuit against the 24 State of California and against the Attorney General. And we 25 believe that the Attorney General, whether he wants to concede

1 defeat or not, wants to concede that Proposition 8 is 2 unconstitutional, as he has. He is and remains a defendant in 3 this case against whom a judgment will have to be entered as a 4 defendant.

5 THE COURT: Well, why don't you file that in very 6 short order, in the next few days? And if you submit that, and 7 Mr. Cooper, then, has -- what? -- a week to reply?

8 MR. COOPER: A week would be entirely adequate.

9 THE COURT: Then the matter will be submitted, and 10 ruled on on the papers.

11 Yes. The Attorney General wants to be heard on this.

12 Now whose side do you want to be on?

13 MS. PACHTER: Your Honor, the Attorney General will 14 oppose the motion to realign him as plaintiff in this case.
15 And we would like more than a few days to brief that 16 opposition.

17 THE COURT: Okay. How much do you need?

18 MS. PACHTER: Today is Wednesday?

19 THE COURT: Today is Wednesday.

20 MS. PACHTER: Two weeks from today, your Honor.

21 THE COURT: All right. That's fine.

22 MS. PACHTER: Thank you, your Honor.

23 THE COURT: And then Mr. Cooper's reply can be a week 24 after?

25 MR. COOPER: Yes, your Honor. That would be fine.
